POETRY

TO A LADY GOLFER. The delay is an inoffensive bow, leaving the driver's feet. And yet you stand and beat them for an hour.

And sometimes over; Though dandelions are a nerve restorer, One is not meant to pluck them with a driver.

His garden wall delights, I have no doubt, Our next door neighbor; To pummel it and try to knock it out Is waste of labor.

You cannot overtop those stones and mortar With balls that cost a dollar and a quarter; Those bushes were a constant source of pride.

To all beholders, Now, beholders, they adorn the countryside. Mined with boulders, Naught could have caused this devastation utter.

Save dynamite or your destroying putter; The landscape all has changed since you have been; Our fellow member; These stones are scattered and torn that, seemed so green.

But last September, Through coal cuts from slanting, fitting, How much I hope you'll stick henceforth to knitting.

—Harold Ayle, in the New York Sun.

REST AT NOON.

Now with a recreated mind Back to the world my way I find. Fed by the hills one little hour, By meadow slope and beechen bowers.

Cedar serene, benignant larch, Horn mountains and the azure arch. Where dazzling vapors make
