The sermon was by Rev. J. H. Wickerath, S. J., of the faculty of Holy Cross college, who in opening his address spoke of the world-wide respect and admiration for Christopher Columbus. That name, he said, is one of the greatest in the chronicle of the world; it marks an epoch, a turning point in history. He found a new and great world and opened it up for civilization. Who could doubt that the great man he has seen the glory of this country as it is today, with its 95,000,000 people enjoying modern civilization? He said that the great man who marks an epoch, a turning point in history, is not a man, but a coward. I am thankful that we have not a man who will not stand by his principles in face of scorn or ridicule.
