to re-election any person who has in the past held the office by election or by succession. The closest votes of the day were for the direct vote amendment for a direct popular vote on president and vice president, defeated by 23, and Senator Payne's amendment to lengthen to six years the term of the president who might be in office when the constitutional amendment was ratified. This was defeated, 26 to 30.

Several Amendments Defeated.

Proposals for two four year terms and one four year term, suggestions to modify the resolution so it would not apply to the president and amendments to make it only apply to presidents elected after its ratification were all defeated by large majorities. Progressives and republicans who declared themselves friendly to Colonel Roosevelt again led a fight against the entire resolution. The progressives declared it was against American governmental principles to limit the right of the people to choose a president.
