WILLIMANTIC.

What is Going on Tonight. St. Hopkins, Loomer Opera House. SUFFRAGE CAMPAIGNING. Daughter of Congressman Hill Starts in With Willimantic Workers.

Miss Clara Hill, daughter of Congressman E. J. Hill of Norwich, was holding her first suffrage factory meeting here Thursday noon when a runaway horse broke into the group and usurped the attention of the entire audience. Miss Hill was thrown from the box on which she was standing and but for the quick action of a workman might have been seriously injured. The suffrage campaigners have been holding factory meetings every day this week and without trouble. But when Miss Hill joined the party things began to happen. Miss Hill said she wanted something hard to do. And with the thermometer at zero, Miss Emily Pierson, the campaign manager, naturally chose a factory meeting from the list of hard jobs. Friday noon Miss Hill was decked out in a regalia of purple, green and white webbing, such as the suffragists always wear for outdoor work. A newsgirl was slung across her shoulder and filled with free literature. Miss Hill had never worn a regalia and she had never before peddled suffrage leaflets from a newsgirl. But she took to the situation bravely and started off toward the Thread Mill in company with Madame Jeanne Cheruy who speaks in French. At the big gate of the mill they established themselves in time to catch the lines of workers as they swarmed into the factory. This is the regular factory meeting habit of suffragists. They do not try to hold a meeting when they are hungry people, and they do not try to hold their leaflets when they hand out their leaflets in French.

and call in a loud voice as they do so. "Meeting here at twelve-thirty; come back early!" Miss Hill got through with the shouting although she was wondering what her Washington friends would think of her and feeling just a bit embarrassed as the factory people started at her. She had a few members of the party but here was another one and some called "freak" and "auf-fergette" and all of them stared as she passed. The women stood their ground and very soon they were alone for the crowd had gone on dinner-dancing, leaving them to stand at the gate until twelve-thirty. Madame Cheruy begged a box from a grocer and set it up beside the gate while Miss Hill thought of the time and worry she had had. She had no sooner started speaking, with perhaps fifty people crowded about her, when the runaway horse appeared. No one saw the animal as it came toward the gate. The horse struck the gate and heeled back; his testimony in the matter cannot be taken. Nevertheless he struck the crowd going at a good clip and people flew to the side. The horse was ploughed through the gathering. He had no intention of stopping on his way to dinner. The horse struck the box on which Miss Hill was standing and sent it flying with the suffragist tumbled beneath the wagon wheels.

It was then that the clever mill hand came to the rescue. As it turned out nothing happened to cause serious consequences but there was no more speaking and Miss Hill and her French assistant were willing to admit they had had enough for one day. The woman suffrage campaign party which has been here since Monday will leave tomorrow for Middletown where they are scheduled for another week, the fifth of the 12 weeks' campaign. Miss Clara Hill is not discouraged as a result of her experiences for she will remain here over Sunday to speak in South Windham today and on Sunday she speaks before the girls' club of the First Congregational church. Miss Helen Allen, another member of the party, went to Naukauck to address the members of the group there. Miss Emily Pierson, manager of the campaign, will return to Willimantic next week to organize a local suffrage league. Sixty well known club and society women have expressed a desire to join the league of which Mrs. William A. King will be a leader.

Tony Leo, of Thompson, a road contractor, who was petitioned into involuntary insolvency by his creditors, came to this city to file a bankruptcy statement concerning his assets and liabilities before Judge Bowen, referee in bankruptcy. Little progress was made, the investigation tending to show that the only probable available assets were damages that might possibly accrue from a highway contract for highway work either completed or in process of construction. Leo having been the contractor in four highway jobs in this state and one in Rhode Island, involving $87,000. While the hearing was in progress Friday Sheriff Shroyer of Thompson appeared on the scene and placed Leo under arrest on a warrant charging him with fraud. The complainant is Thomas Ryan of Thompson, who endorsed Leo's note for $1,000 and had it to pay. Ryan claims Leo represented he owned 27 horses free from incumbrance as well as road rollers and other road making machinery. Leo will be brought before the police court in Putnam to answer to the charge.

Politics and the Police Court. "The thinking men of both parties in this city look with regret on any movement that would make the police court simply a political football. The names of Representative T. J. Kelly and Judge Shea of the probate court are also mentioned in connection with the judgeship of the police court. Judge W. A. Arnold has presided over the police court for ten years. He represents the type of official whose administration of justice is discriminatingly tempered with sympathy for the criminal in whom he sees possibilities of reform. He is one of the leaders in the civic and humanitarian enterprises of this community that engage the interest, thought and work of its best citizenship and the sentiment is strong against an attack on men of his type, inspired only by simply political motives.

PUTNAM HIGH HERO. Referee P. W. Hehir Tells of Plucky Basketball Player. A Worcester paper of Tuesday said: "The funniest accident I ever saw in a basketball game" is what P. W. Hehir, Worcester's famous basketball official, said about a little accident he saw while he was refereeing the Putnam, Conn., high and Killingly high game in Putnam Friday night. "The little center of the Putnam team got some kind of a poke or twist that threw his shoulder out of place. It was as bad an appearing dislocation as I have ever seen. It seemed that the bones were broken and that the ragged edges were jutting almost through the skin. "But the little fellow retired to a dressing room, a doctor came up and flashed some ether under his nose, just barely sending the young athlete into a daze, and presto, the doctor grabbed the lad's shoulder, wrenched it, and as we who were around heard a rasping noise ending with a click, the shoulder went back in place. "It was only a moment before the effect of the ether was worn away, and then the lad went back onto the floor and played a rattling nice game. I don't know the boy's name, but he was game and a good player into the bargain."
