PENSIONS FOR SCHOOL TEACHERS Connecticut Behind the Times, Principal Ames Tells Teachers' Association—State Pensions Would Make for Efficiency and Retain Here the Teachers the State Has Trained.

In the two meetings of the Eastern Connecticut Teachers' Association, held in New London and Willimantic last Friday, with an attendance of probably about 500 at both places, one of the topics of importance to the teachers and to the general public was that of the Pension Situation and Outlook which was the subject for an address by Principal Charles L. Ames, of the Brown School, Hartford.

Reasons for a Pension System. That situation, Connecticut shows that there are three good reasons for the maintenance of a pension system for public school teachers.

First, the state needs the system. Desirable teachers of education and training are scarce; the normal schools do not graduate enough teachers for the new positions; many of the brightest and most capable are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession.

Second, the teachers need a pension system. The report issued by the Russell-Jones Foundation in December, 1912, says: "The average annual salary of public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Third, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Fourth, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Fifth, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Sixth, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Seventh, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Eighth, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Ninth, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Tenth, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Eleventh, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."

Twelfth, the state needs a pension system. The average annual salary of all public school teachers in the United States, as a whole, is $485. The fact that teachers are leaving the state to pursue the whole pension movement in the business world and in the teaching profession, is a high grade of service, and as a nation, that we place a low valuation on the teachers' work."
