CRIMSON RANKS A SLIGHT FAVORITE OVER YALE.

Teams Unable to Practice Owing to Rain—Big Demand for Seats.

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 19.—On the eve of the annual football game the Crimson continues to rank favorite over the Blue, although the waning interest in the game has steadily influenced the quotations narrowed from 10 to 6 to 5 to 4 this evening, and it was predicted that the market of Yale money tomorrow morning the Blue would enter the game very close to a not an even choice, against the Cambridge eleven.

The heavy rain which fell all afternoon in Cambridge, has penetrated the stadium gridiron and softened the turf to an extent which will militate against the best playing conditions expected from Harvard's backfield. While the forecast calls for clearing weather Saturday morning, a heavy rain and a big drop in temperature are also predicted.

As a result, close followers of the football fortunes of the two eleven are believed to have penetrated the stadium gridiron and softened the turf to an extent which will militate against the best playing conditions expected from Harvard's backfield. While the forecast calls for clearing weather Saturday morning, a heavy rain and a big drop in temperature are also predicted.

The possibility of inclement weather did not check enthusiasm in the big crowd of all eastern football classics and tonight every hotel in the city is packed. A night before arrival, many of whom are having difficulty in securing accommodations. A special train service from New York and other places will add thousands to the gathering. Close to 50,000 spectators are expected to be present in the permanent seats among the other weaker stands.

On the known movement of local bonds, tomorrow's bank statement is expected to show a cash gain of $10,000,000 to $15,000,000, with the loan total sales, par value, $4,495,000. United States registered two were up 1-2 per cent on call.

BLUE MEETS THE CRIMSON TODAY

Yale-Harvard Contest Overshadows All Other Gridiron Battles of the Day—Crimson Players Enter the Game as Favorites With a Well Drilled Machine.

New York, Nov. 19.—While the Harvard-Yale contest overshadows all other football games to be played on eastern gridirons tomorrow, there are several other games which will have an important bearing upon the final alignment of the eleven for the season of 1915. General interest will be focussed upon the outcome of the annual meeting of the Blue and Crimson, but the Dartmouth-Syracuse, Colgate-Georgetown, Trinity-Wesleyan and the contests in which the service teams compete will all be followed with more than usual keenness. There will be missing from the weekly lineup, however, several of the largest institutions, for Princeton has completed her schedule while Cornell and Pennsylvania are resting for their Thanksgiving Day game which will close the season for both teams.

Based upon the theory and science of modern football, Harvard should be and is favored to defeat Yale, but that the game will follow these lines is not at all certain since gridiron football has received far more than the usual number of jolts and upsets this fall. Individual Ability a Factor.

Football is, in the last analysis, a team game where the perfect cooperation of eleven players on offense and defense should outweigh the individual ability of athletes who fail to work with the same harmony and cohesion during the contest. It sometimes happens, however, that the strength and individual ability of men forming such a combination is so great that it into a combination physically perfect and thoroughly prepared, from a football standpoint, for the grueling game expected.

Yale, since her string of defeats at the hands of Washington and Jefferson, Colgate and Brown, has made remarkable strides under the coaching of Tom Shevin and others. It was the development of a powerful fighting spirit and unusual keenness in following the ball rather than any advance in team work either in attack or defense that gave the Blue victory over Princeton. The same methods applied to Harvard, will result in another win appears unlikely, although it is conceded that the Blue will be far closer than was thought a few weeks ago, for the Blue now believe, and rightly, that they have a class of footballers in the Crimson.

Contest Along Cautious Lines.

Harvard, however, is not unaware of the test that faces her tomorrow, for she has not underestimated the strength and possibilities of the Blue. The contest is likely to be played along cautious lines, with an unusual amount of kicking on both teams. The Tigers to take advantage of any opportunity to score through the carelessness or weakness of the opponent.

Harvard fundamentally and in material is perhaps better equipped to strike successfully at the right moment than Yale. The Crimson team of a perfectly engineered team touch-down and one field goal by Mahan against two by Tibbott. Yale also conquered the Tiger as the result of two field goals by Guernsey and a touchdown made after Way had picked up a fumbled ball and crossed the line through an absolutely clear field. In this game Yale was not strong enough to prevent Princeton from making a team touchdown and barely escaped at least one other.

It seems unlikely that Harvard will display the weak spots in generalship and strategy of which Princeton was guilty at critical points in last Saturday's game, or that Yale will find the breaks of the play falling so readily in her favor. Under such circumstances, the Blue will have to depend upon either exceptional efforts or strong team play to overcome the Crimson machine. While the Harvard eleven of this year is not on a par with that of 1914, it is still far from weak. The squad contains a number of excellent players and Coach Haughton has welded it into a combination physically perfect and thoroughly prepared, from a football standpoint, for the grueling game expected.

JACK DILLON PICKED AS HEAVYWEIGHT CONTENDER

Repaired by Critics As One of the Most Formidable Fighting Machines.

In figuring out who the logical contender for the white heavyweight championship battle with Jess Willard happens to be at this time, one of the leading sports writers of the country picks Jack Dillon as the man, rather than Frank Moran, who recently defeated Jim Coffey, as his authority on the boxing game.

The furor occasioned by Frank Moran's victory over Jim Coffey has abated, and the boxing enthusiasts, who in the beginning proclaimed the Pittsburgh warrior the logical candidate for a match with Jess Willard are wondering if some one has not been overlooked in the excitement.

The first name that comes to mind is that of Jack Dillon of Indianapolis, the light heavyweight, who has fought the best men in the world in uniform success. Dillon, it is true, dipped his colors to Eddie McGoorty at the start of his career, and like him bowed to the skill of Frank Klaus in twenty rounds at Daly City, California. But those were in the days when he was fighting as a dweeblight, sapping his vitality to make the weight.

Dillon is regarded by critics as one of the most formidable fighting machines in the ranks of the big fellows, by whom Jess Willard is held in all honor for the performance, but his myriad managers proceeded to erect a wall of invincibility about him which has kept him from the big prize. He and Tom McMahon beat him not long before he walloped Jack Johnson, who was fighting as a dweeblight. The Indianapolis warrior is perhaps the most nearly perfect type of the fighting man in the present era. He is a natural, but it is not the less effective. To see Dillon in action one would brand him a slugger totally devoid of science. It is true that he has presently produced since the days of Fitzsimmons. His style is totally different from that of the freckled fighter, but it is none the less effective. To see Dillon in action one would brand him a slugger totally devoid of science.
