TWO BOUND OVER TO SUPERIOR COURT

Joseph Bloom and Frank McKenna Held Under $1,000 Bonds For Attempted Larceny. Joseph Bloom and Frank McKenna in the New London police court Saturday morning with Judge Crandall on the bench were bound over to trial in the superior court on charge of attempted larceny under bonds of $1,000.

They were arrested Friday night at the Union station by Special Officer Lewis A. Lawrence and Frank P. Patten, employed by the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad. Both pleaded not guilty.

Officer Lawrence was the first witness called by Prosecuting Attorney Cronin. He testified that he was sent to New London to headquarters at Boston to watch the heat race crowds. He said that his attention was first attracted to Bloom when he saw him feel the pockets of three men in the crowd. He made no attempt to arrest but watched the man move closely. He finally detected McKenna in the crowd. Finally the officer said he saw Bloom stick his fingers in the hip pocket of a man at the station and was ready to arrest him when Officer Patten, who was also watching the man, reached over and took Bloom out of the crowd at the same time calling Officer Lawrence to get the other man.

McKenna started away from the scene on the double track and Officer Lawrence lost him, not being familiar enough with the crowd. He returned to Officer Patten and took charge of Bloom while the latter officer started to New London to get McKenna. When he found his man he asked him if he had a ticket and where he lived. McKenna refused to answer and was arrested.

After a long trial in court in which the two officers were the only witnesses called, Judge Crandall found the men guilty of attempted larceny and bound them over.
