More Stringent Methods May Have to be Followed to Keep Infantile Paralysis Out of This Section. For the purpose of taking more stringent measures to prevent children from the infantile paralysis involving this county the health officers of New London county may have a conference today to decide whether such steps should be taken. Health officer, Philip of Norwich recommended to Secretary J. T. Black of the State Board of Health and County Health Officer Arthur M. Brown a number of days ago that all children from New York where the disease is raging be barred from entering this city, but after a conference it was decided that the present methods instituted by the local health officer were sufficient. Many children are fleeing from Greater New York as a result of the vicinity that it is difficult to keep track of them, said Health Officer Brophy Friday. Dr. Brophy believes if they continue to come in ever increasing numbers more stringent methods will have to be done. The inspection of the children passengers on the New London line steamer on its arrival in New London from New York early Friday morning revealed two more suspected cases of infantile paralysis.
