Early Adjustment Expected

This became known after John A. Moffit and James A. Smyth, federal conciliation commissioners, had had conferences with the Bayonne board of city commissioners and George E. After their talk with Hennessey the conciliators announced that he "had shown a conciliatory attitude" and they looked "for an early adjustment of the difficulties."

Some Advance in Wages Likely

It was understood that Hennessey informed them that the Standard Oil company was prepared to deal with the men only on the same terms under which the strike of a year ago was settled, namely, that they first return to work, after which their demands would be considered. He also indicated that some advance in wages was likely to be granted. The present wage for most workers is $2.20 a day, it is said.
