SEEDS ARE HIGH AND ALSO SCARCE.

Actual Shortage is Given as the Primary Cause.

A scarcity in the supply of seeds, and a consequent increase in their prices over this of last year, make a great factor in preventing the raising of greater crops this season. The price of seeds is much higher than last year.

The scarcity of seed potatoes is alarming, according to the dealers. The high prices which prevailed recently induced many of the farmers to sell all or part of their supply.

The sudden popularity of suburban gardening also was said to have increased the demand for seeds in small amounts was said to have been unprecedented this season. The effect has been to raise prices already high, because of a shortage in the supply, by increasing the demand.

In explanation of the rise of seed prices, dealers declared that the primary cause was an actual shortage. Instead of holding back to the usual proportion for seed in such crops as corn, beans, peas and potatoes, farmers were said to have been lured into selling them by the high prices prevailing.

It is estimated that the export of seed upon the export of seeds by most European countries contributed to the shortage, it was said, but the main cause was the complete failure of the crop in the United States.

OVER TWO THOUSAND SUFFRAGISTS IN COUNTY

Total for the State is 37,101 as Reported at Hearing.

Wednesday afternoon there was a large assemblage of women in the hall of the house, attracted by the hearing before the woman suffrage committee on the amendment to an act concerning qualifications of women voters and also an act providing that women may vote on the question of the manufacture and sale of liquor.

Representative Shaw of Reading made the opening address for the suffragettes and advocated favorable action on both bills. Representative Martin of Orange said he was opposed two years ago to submitting the right of women to vote on full suffrage, but he favored the act to give women the right to vote on the liquor question. He believed there were faddists in the women's suffrage movement on both sides, but he believed there should be earnest union on the liquor side of the question.

Mr. Ewers, representative for Manchester, strongly urged the favorable report on the act which relates to women voting on the liquor license question. He said the women's vote would be a dead issue. He said that if men could only vote for school visitors the balloting would be very light, so it is better to expect the women to vote on the liquor question. He believed there were faddists in the women's suffrage movement on both sides, but he believed there should be earnest union on the liquor side of the question.

Representative Smith of Plainville spoke in favor of the bills under consideration. He said the women's influence with the children is stronger than the father's. It is the women who are doing the housework, who are teaching the children how to shoot, and it is the woman that is the foundation of the universe, and the women ought to be given all voting rights. He said the women should come into caucus and make it clean. He said the caucus abuses would be remedied. Mr. Smith asked if the ladies present were as intelligent as the bums about town who have the franchise.

Representative Nelson of Hamden wished to be recorded as in favor of the bill and Mr. Wilcox of Stonington made like declaration, as did also half a dozen other members of the house. This closed the talk on behalf of the members of the house.

Mrs. Hepburn announced that the Connecticut Woman Suffrage association favored the bill giving women the right to vote on the liquor license question and at municipal and presidential elections. She spoke at length and recited, as did all the other speakers, what had been heard before at hearings at previous sessions, and at the present session when the women's policy since the Civil war, Colonel George, amid much applause, reviewed the course of German propaganda during the past five years, declaring it to have been Germany's intent to strike at the United States from the west, through Russia, and to muck her for the purpose of frustrating the aims of such malcontents that the Home Guard was formed. He described briefly the guard's organization, and said it was the desire of the emergency board that every man unable to join the regular forces should enroll in it—for clerical work or other noncombatant duties if the board deemed best. He reported that the guard had all the supplies it needed, and that they were coming in even faster than they could be handled.

Robert P. Butler, of the military census committee, pointed with pride to the fact that if a draft were made, the aid of the census statistics, Connecticut could have the requisite number of men picked within three hours—whereas it would take other commonwealth little short of three weeks.
