Columbia Man Who Beat and Knifed Myer Brittan Out Under Bail—His Father Acquitted.

The cases of Daniel and Louis Resnick of Columbia, charged with assault with intent to kill, were tried Saturday before Justice of the Peace H. P. Collins at Yeomans hall, Columbia.

The assault was the outgrowth of hard feeling between the Resnicks and Myer Brittan. Brittan hired the Resnicks, Daniel, Louis and Charles, to cut some hay for him and then discharged them because they did not work regularly.

The trial lasted until late in the evening and two of the Resnicks, Daniel and Louis, ambushed Brittan when he was going home and beat him up. During the encounter, in which Brittan received numerous bruises and two black eyes, one of the Resnicks drew but I said it was an old house on an open green. "Yes," he said, nodding, "on the common. A very nice, roomy old house, with good outbuildings. But why do you not straighten out those corners on the road to Perth? They are death traps."

"Never," he said, laughing. "But I study. We study in the States. I study my boy, at the old General staff. And tell your Sussex County Council, beautiful English lady, to straighten out those corners, for they are very awkward indeed, and might easily cause serious accidents some day when the roads have to be used for real business."

"There isn't any more to this except that England's entrance into the war probably prevented serious accidents on the roads of Sussex. I have seen similar accidents had taken place in Belgium, France, Russia and the rest of Europe. And the way things have turned out in the Sussex State, doubtless as familiar to the hard-working German, is a warning to the German. General Staff loses interest in road conditions in other countries it will be a good time to talk peace."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Michael's Dream and Awakening. The Cologne Gazette publishes on Saturday under the heading "Chancellor and Reichstag," the following paragraph:

The German Michael had once more drawn his nightmare over his ears. His dreams led him into the Empire of Constantinople. He was there, he said, after much shaking of hands seated at the same table with his bitterest enemies, discussing amid a display of unlimited mutual respect the salvation of all mankind. Michael promised all his neighbors and newly won patrons that he would do his utmost to bring about that he would organize his house as seemed right to the exalted wisdom of the others, and arrange everything according to his own ideas.

When he had rubbed the sleep out of his eyes, his dream pleased him so well that he told it to all the world. But the echo which came from the enemy countries was—"What! Peace with Germany? Not before the sun has set in the ground. Absolutism or democracy? What is that to us? Germany energy, German thoroughness and discipline are our enemies. We will not be lying on our backs. Our hands are already trembling with fear, and his whole house is trembling. Drive him through hunger to despair, since he has the impudence of lying on the unselfish champions of freedom and right in his own country."

It was true that Michael's knees were trembling, but not from fear. It was because he saw in his horror what he had done, and that his dreams were accursed. He had not before this time taken hold of helpless Michael, carefully but firmly removed the nightmare from his head, and confiscated it for the period of the war, always being on his guard. Then he put a steel helmet on Michael's head, and just see! Michael called for his sword, and stormed the serried ranks of his enemies, spreading death and destruction.

Point to Be Considered. American sentiment should be reliable in preventing aliens from profiting by exemption to work in positions which are filled by men serving in the army.—Washington Star.
