The plan of a junior high school for Norwich which will not only serve as a high school but as a memorial for those who gave their lives in the world war met with some opposition at the meeting held at the town hall on Tuesday evening.

When the meeting was called to order by B. P. Bishop, chairman of the town school committee, at 8.05 o'clock there were present 100 persons.

It is not what concerns us most. It is the highest of any city in the United States and that in view of the fact that the present school system seemed adequate to him.

Mr. Bishop then called for questions or ideas and Edward Kirby took the floor and launched into a fiery discourse on how Norwich could not afford to have a junior high school.

Mr. Bishop then introduced J. H. Van Sickle, superintendent of schools in Springfield, who has had more or less to do with the junior high school system of that city.

Mr. Bishop then said that if it was best for the town to have a junior high school he would support it.

There are four junior high schools in Springfield fully developed. In the seventh grade we have three courses of study, one with a foreign language, one with a foreign literature and one with a foreign history.

Mr. Bishop, after the conclusion of Mr. Van Sickle's address, called Milton Snyder, state inspector of high schools in Connecticut, who has spoken here several times before.

Mr. Snyder told the school board that he had visited and of their success. He also mentioned the fact that New London had voted a bond issue of $500,000 for a new high school.

Mr. Snyder said that the present school system was not adequate to the needs of the town. Besides being unable to take care of the constantly increasing number of pupils, the buildings were out of date and soon would have to be discarded and new ones built.
