NEW LONDON'S MUNICIPAL EXPENDITURES

(Special to The Bulletin.)

New London, March 26.—That committee of the New London Chamber of Commerce that boomed for the purchase of Miller pond for the financial interest of the owners, to respected citizens of Western, backed by members of the court of common council, has resulted in lowering the city treasury in the sum of $1,750. This was the charge of Engineer Cairns of Waterbury. Readers will recall that the board of water commissioners recommended the purchase of Bogue brook property to increase the water supply of the city, while the other interests advocated the purchase of Miller pond. There was a squabble in the council over the matter that resulted in a hold-up of the water board proposition and going outside of the board to get the opinion of a disinterested civil engineer. The expert from Waterbury was called in and he coincided with the views of the water board, and recommended the Bogue brook plan as preferable to the Miller pond proposition. Then the council adopted the Waterbury engineer's report and the plan of the local water board went into effect.

While the money paid for the service of the expert was a useless expenditure from the start, yet it was a money-saver for the city at that. The point had been reached where the court of common council, at the instance of the chamber of commerce, had discredited the water board, and would have saddled Miller pond on the city, when the suggestion to get the opinion of an outside expert was decided upon. The result was not what the Miller pond promoters expected, but there was no going behind the returns. Not even the most overburdened taxpayer will raise objection to the charge of Engineer Cairns, as his report really saved big money to the city and the extension of the water service will prove to be adequate for the needs of the city for years to come.

Now that the snow and ice is gone and the surface of the highways is discernable, it is plain even to those who have no ideas in regard to road maintenance and repairs, that while the appropriation for streets as set forth in the annual budget is very liberal, still it is inadequate to put the highways in as good condition as they were before the heavy snows came and remained until removed without artificial means. Montauk avenue for instance, is nearly its whole length of about three miles is very much in need of immediate repair. There are long stretches where the macadam is now a crumbled mass, and almost impassable conditions prevail in many other leading thoroughfares, so there is work and lots of it, right in view for the highway department. To do this needed work requires a very large amount of cash, and its use cannot be charged up to the extravagant account of the present administration.

The cause of the really bad conditions of the highway cannot be attributed to any member of the court of common council or any human being, as they have no control over the elements. Therefore taxpayers expect to add a little more to the already heavy burden. A special city meeting for an additional appropriation for streets is among the near probabilities.

The street department, or some city officials, are responsible, however, for wasting the public coin in connection with the laying of the new sidewalk on one side of Orchard street. Material for this work was carted into that street just before the city meeting was called to fix the budget for the year. The appropriations went through without much of a hitch, and there were no opponents to the appropriations from Orchard street and vicinity as that street was to get a proportion of the appropriation for sidewalks. The material, however, was permitted to remain in piles in that street until the cold weather came. Then the work of building the sidewalk was commenced. A large section of the walk was laid and kept in condition by the nightly covering of straw to protect from the frost.

Then came the zero weather, but the work went right on. In the result the walk that was laid on the section of the street nearest Montauk avenue, and extending all along the front of the Mono property for a distance, perhaps, of five hundred feet, the surface of the walk is now sealed off, and is on a par with a walk made of cinders. This section of walk must be relaid and the city must pay the extra cost. It is a bum job, and the end joining property owners cannot justly be required to pay for half the cost of that sidewalk as at present constructed.

Nearly all the property in Orchard street is owned by industrious citizens of Italian birth who pay full proportion of taxes to the city. They are therefore entitled to equal consideration of property owners in any other section of the city. They are not a fault for the laying of concrete sidewalks at a time when work of that kind cannot be done satisfactorily. It is the intention of Mr. Moore, the largest property owner in the street, to insist that a proper walk be laid along his premises before the cost of the present apology for a walk is taxed against him.

With the sidewalks of that street made good, it is the duty of the highway committee to put the street proper in passable condition. At the present time, while the sun warms the earth, the mud in that street, by actual measurement is fourteen inches deep, and a temporary plank walk is necessary for people to get across the street. Such conditions do not prevail in any other street so thickly populated as Orchard street, in any other section of the street. Nearly every house there is owned by Italians and are in good respectable condition. These people are entitled to at least a passable highway along their premises.

"Who is the oldest printer in New London?" That is the query put up to this correspondent, but just why the question is asked, he does not know, nor as there is no doubt on that point, Edward A. Colby, the veteran hand master, is the oldest printer in the city in years, and in service, too, as done of the very best at that. He has been trained in practical job printing as well as newspaper printing. It is so long ago that the details cannot be readily recalled, and Mr. Colby is not at the printer's elbow to be questioned on that point. If memory serves correct, and perhaps it does, Mr. Colby began as a printer's helper in the office of the New London Daily Evening Star when the office was located in what is now known as the B-bar and May building in State street.

Before the Star office was moved to the corner of Bank and State streets Mr. Colby secured employment in the Starr and Farnham printing office at Main and State streets. He worked there for many years for that firm and later for George E. Starr. He then secured employment on the Morning Telegraph, perhaps thirty-five years ago, setting the advertisements. He subsequently went to the Day, and so far as the writer knows, he is still in that employ. On a guess I would say that Mr. Colby has been in the printing business about fifty-eight years. Another question asked: "How old is the oldest printer?" Please ask Mr. Colby the answer.

"Talking on the subject of old printers," said the querist, tell me, if you can, the names of the morning papers that have been printed in New London since Mr. Colby began his life as a printer." Let's see. There was the Chronicle, the Morning Star that shined for two weeks only, the Day that switched from the morning to the evening fold about thirty-six years ago, or within a week after the expiration of the Evening Telegram, and just before the first issue of the morning Telegraph was printed. Some of the printers who worked at the case or press, or both, however, was out of the customary apprentice period were: Isaac C. Sistrare, Patrick J. Lawley, Charles E. Burr, Robert S. Hayes, William Carroll now with the Providence Journal, John Dray, Lewis C. Munn, Major Phelps, Perry

Moore, James Murray, George Willoughby. "Why don't you pass your self" was the next question to the writer. The querist was then referred to Richard Wall, the local historian. Of these old-time printers of fifty years and more ago, only two besides Mr. Colby survive.

Prohibition Director Stremleau, of Meriden, a former president of the Connecticut Branch of the American Federation of Labor, who held a federal job in New London during the war, who once represented Meriden in the state legislature and who has been prominent in labor legislation in the general assembly for several years, is now in readiness to enforce the prohibition law in this state. Mr. Stremleau has done much for organized labor and in appreciation he has been rewarded by positions that gives him returns sufficient so that he does not have to work at his trade. He is an able man. He is the possessor of excellent judgment and this is shown in his appointment of a New London boy as one of the trio of inspectors. He has named Frederic E. Fenagar, Jr. who will aid him in law enforcement, for the inspectorship. The appointee's father at one time was a deputy collector of the port of New London and has held some city offices and is now employed in a local bank.

The new appointee is twenty-two years of age and therefore could not have been a voter for more than one year. This is shown that he was not appointed as a reward for political services. He is in luck in getting this new job, as he resigned only a few days ago a job as cost inspector in the navy department, at Hoboken. Young Mr. Fenagar, by reason of his age and the fact that he is not very widely known, ought to develop into quite a name in his old home town. It is said that the young man is possessed of much ability and will prove a most competent prohibition inspector. His friends will extend congratulations and wish him success. There are many in New London who are of the opinion that a general vote of thanks ought to be given to Director Stremleau for his excellent judgment in making the appointment of a New Londoner. The other inspectors are: ... ridgeport, one from each city.

GOOD POINTS NEEDED IN THE STOCK BOAR

It is most essential that as many good points as possible should be embodied in the stock board. The first undoubtedly is that he should be pure-bred—that is, one has been bred for a certain number of generations on certain lines or a standard more or less defined. In order to be certain of this, and of the fixity of those good points of the boar which are apparent, an old established herd should be visited, and the choice of the boar be made after seeing the parent. It is a generally accepted opinion that the male animal exerts a far greater influence on the external points of the joint produce than does the female parent, the latter in turn influencing the internal portions to a greater degree. It is therefore necessary that in selecting a boar one should be sought for compactness in frame as long and deep in carcass as is possible consistent with strength, well developed in the hind quarters, with a wide chest, ribs well sprung, head of medium size, but wide between the ears and eyes, the latter being bright and lively, indicative of sexual energy.
