MANSFIELD CENTER
An impressive service of installation of officers of the Christian Endeavor Society was conducted at the church Friday evening by the pastor, Rev. R. G. Pavy. The ceremony was followed by an excellent sermon by Rev. Theodore Bachelor of Willington, president of the C. E. Union. Guests were present from neighboring societies of the town. Another pleasant feature was the supper in the early evening. George Lauder of Minneapolis was the guest of his brother, Alexander and Mrs. Lauder last week.

DANIELSON AND PUTNAM NEWS

DANIELSON

Just how much authority have police officials to halt any automobile that happens to come along and search it, its occupants and their baggage for intoxicating liquors, without having a warrant for the particular person, persons, or car to be searched?

This little question was propounded Thursday to four attorneys of standing here and in Putnam and in each case the lawyers gave as their opinion that the thing can't be done legally. Yet it is being done right here in Windham county, done regularly and without any excuse or apology.

The stage has been reached where many law abiding people are beginning to resent what good lawyers say is unwarranted interference with their rights as citizens. The police of the city of Willimantic are particular offenders in this respect; in fact, most of the protests heard in this section of the county are relative to the operations of the Willimantic police in their zeal to catch booze runners who have been operating through that city.

According to lawyers who were interviewed on the subject, the amended Eighteenth amendment and sanctified Volstead act do not wholly remove the constitutional rights of a citizen, one of whom with some grit in his crop may decide one of these days to contest the manner in which police officers are operating in some cities and let the courts say just where the limit is in actions of the kind discussed.

One very good lawyer gave it as his opinion that there must be, first, a well grounded reason for believing that a particular automobile is transporting liquor illegally and second, that warrant for the person driving the car must be possessed by an officer before he has any legal right to halt it and institute a search.

In this era of nightly hold-ups and carnivals of crime of every sort few operators of automobiles resist being abruptly halted by strangers at night and in isolated sections of the country, touring through outlying country. This opinion is freely expressed here and in surrounding towns. No reasonable driver will resist, however, halting for an officer when the driver is certain that the man who halts him really is an official. There are many good and law-abiding citizens who do object, and very positively, to having officers rummaging through their cars and personal luggage, and the suggestion has been made that the attorney general rule on the right of officers who act without specific warrants to do this thing.

A Danielson attorney and a member of the legislature from a nearby town were among the people from this section who have been halted at night this week by the police of Willimantic, operating within the city limits. The attorney has voiced no protest, but is one of those who expressed his opinion that the police had no right to stop the car in which he was riding, no more than they would have to stop the car of any other person who was under suspicion of engaging in illegal transportation of liquor of which, by the way, there wasn't even a memory in the attorney's car, which was stopped not because of any violation of the motor vehicle laws, but to look it over for liquor.

Some drivers here are so incensed over these hold-ups for inspection of their cars for liquor that they are threatening really reckless action against officers, actions that they have been advised against and told to seek redress in the courts, where many attorneys agree it will be promptly forthcoming.

One of the very ablest lawyers in either the county or state had this to say about police holding up automoblow to search them for liquor: "If I were out riding and an officer halted my car and attempted to search my luggage or my person without first exhibiting to me a warrant issued against me personally, I should treat him as I would any highwayman and promptly knock him down if I were physically capable of doing so; this, providing, of course, that I did not have a reputation of selling liquor or of transporting it illegally. The fact that cars are being halted and searched for no ground for believing that officers have a right to do this thing without warrants, as they are doing."

Attention was called by F. A. Jacobs, formerly a senator from this district, to the fact that both the chairman of the senate at this session and the chairman of the house are graduates of Killingly high school. Rev. Sherrod Bowditch, a Hampton man, is the senate chaplain and Rev. Edward D. Ayer, "the blind chaplain," pastor of the Congregational church at Montville, is the house chaplain. Rev. Mr. Ayer lives at South Killingly as a boy. Killingly is also represented prominently in the clerks of the court at Montville, by Judge Sablin S. Russell and Attorney Harry W. Peterson of Norwich, two more graduates of the high school here.

J. Arthur Atwood, president of the Danielson Trust company, and the directors of that institution have generously contributed this week to the Relief Fund for the surviving children of Europe. Their pool of gifts from their persons amounted to $135, the largest of the contributions coming from Mr. Atwood.

The funeral of Charles M. Adams, formerly a trolley road conductor, was held Thursday morning from his home at East Killingly with services at St. James' church here at 9 o'clock. Rev. Auguste Chapignac being celebrant of the high mass of requiem. Burial was in the Adams family lot in Westfield cemetery. Rev. Father Chapignac conducting the funeral services and officiating at the grave. The bearers were Arthur Albert, Stanley Regis and Daniel Williams. A. F. Wood was in charge of the funeral arrangements.

At the home of her daughter, Mrs. Fraxton Smith in East Killingly Thursday afternoon at one o'clock a funeral service for Mrs. Mary S. Stocking, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in Danielson. Burial was in Dayville cemetery. The bearers were Arthur Albert, Stanley Regis, Robert Smith, and Frank Harrington. A. F. Wood was the funeral director.

Henry L. Pray, of Ballouville, exhibited Thursday a letter from an insurance company in which an officer of the company, one of the best known in the county, comments with interest on the fact that property insured by Mr. Pray and his brother, Joseph, at Ballouville, has been continuously covered by policies of the company for a period of 50 years, an unusual record. The original policies were issued to Isaac T. Pray, now dead, the father of the Pray brothers.

No word has been received that will clear up the mystery surrounding the theft of tires from the Killip Motor company store here last Sunday. The idea persists, though, that the stolen goods were taken away into Rhode Island.

In celebration of his birthday a party was given for Leo McDonald by his wife, Miss Margaret Head at their home on Academy street. A number of little people were present and enjoyed games. Delicious refreshments were served.

The next clinic to be held here by Dr. Hugh B. Campbell of Norwich will be at the health station in the town hall on Tuesday of next week.

A hearing in the case of James Riley, of Brooklyn, held in jail in default of $5,000 bonds on a charge of assault with intent to kill, is scheduled to be held in Brooklyn on Saturday.

A promise of better business and a revival of manufacturing activity among the textile concerns is seen in liberal orders for a certain line of mill supplies that have been received in Danielson this week.

Attorney E. H. Barry, a representative from Killingly, has been appointed a member of the judiciary committee of the general assembly.

Housewives are advised not to allow any strangers who may come to their doors to gain entrance to the house through any pretext of adjusting radiators, electrical equipment, telephones, etc. Criminals are trying this these days. It is sufficiently easy, on the other hand, to establish whether a man really represents any company that he may claim to be employed by.

The temperature was down to ten degrees above zero Thursday morning this could snap bringing a promise of getting ice for next season's use. Not a bit has been harvested heretofore as yet for general use.

PUTNAM

Thirty-nine bolts of women cloth valued at $4,400 were stolen in a hold robbery at Keegan's mill at Willimantic, in the town of Thompson near the Massachusetts border, during the early morning hour of Thursday. During the forenoon a telephone message from Greenville, N. H., brought information that two of the stolen bolts of cloth, having a value of $2 a yard, had been found on the state highway there, Thursday morning, evidently, had rolled off the truck on which the lot was carried and that they would indicate that the thieves were heading for Providence as Greenville is a few miles west of that city on the state highway leading from this city through Chapman. While the Keegan mill is not operating there is a night watchman on duty there, yet the burglars came with a motor truck forced an entrance, took the considerable length of time that must have been necessary to load the stolen goods and get away without anyone having knowledge of the robbery, which was not discovered until Thursday morning when the police were notified.

The postoffice at Willimantic was also broken into and a grocery store in the little village, but apparently nothing of any great value was taken from either the postoffice or store.

Willimantic is in an isolated section of the county, but is easily reached over a good state road.

The state police department was notified of the robbery Thursday morning and officers from Hartford were expected here Thursday night to make an investigation of the case.

A break was also made here about one o'clock Thursday morning. Officer William Jarval was standing nearly opposite the entrance to the Bradley theatre at that hour when he thought he caught the sound of breaking glass. Hurrying to the street he saw a man in the rear of a building in that vicinity and was not long in discovering the fact that a side window in the C. D. Arnold market had been forced open. Although Officer Jarval felt certain that he was going to catch a burglar right on the job, he found the market unoccupied. The cash register had been opened, however, and a roll of nickels and some pennies taken. This break is believed to be what the police call a "local" job and possibly the work of some youth or boy.

Soon after the break Sergeant Laird and Officer Jarval picked up three youths who were regarded with suspicion as being connected with the robbery. These youths admitted the robbery that they had nothing to do with the break at the Arnold market. They said they were making their way from Hartford to the homes in Providence and that they had spent the preceding night at the police station in Hartford. Their statements were checked up by telephone calls and verified, their names and addresses given at Hartford being the same as those of the three youths who were reached at addressed given in Providence.

The severe sentences imposed upon the Bradleys and Shacketts in the superior court at Willimantic, startled many in this city when they read them Thursday. Attorneys are not inclined to regard them as excessive, however, particularly in the case of Bradley, who has left a long trail of crime in his wake and who is wanted in New Hampshire, Massachusetts and in Bridgeport for other affairs. Bradley is given credit by his attorney, Chas. L. Torrey, of this city of being a game man, inasmuch as he openly took full responsibility for the crime with which he was charged in order to protect Mrs. Bradley, in as great a degree as might be possible, from the punishment impending in court.

Mr. and Mrs. Bradley are really and deeply devoted to each other, very much in love, in fact—and the prison terms that they are now facing seem additionally heart-breaking to them on this account.

It will be of interest to the public to know this and will account in some measure for Mrs. Bradley's very strange conduct in court at Willimantic Wednesday and of the pitiful manner in which she sobbed and trembled as she realized the full purport of what it means to be a transgressor of the law and required to face the penalties thereby incurred.

That Bradley had hopes of making a second escape from the county jail at Brooklyn after he was brought back from Bridgeport last week was made known here Thursday. A letter he had written to his wife advised her not to be surprised if he again escaped before his trial, as he intended to ask for permission to be taken down to the office of the jail that he might telephone her and try to make a break for liberty from there. The letter, which he entrusted to another prisoner at the jail for delivery, was intercepted by jail officials.

A man who called at a home on Grove street, Wednesday evening, and inquired if he might not offer his services in adjusting any of the radiators that might need attention so aroused the suspicions of the head of the house that the police were notified of the affair. The request in itself was unusual and it was made at an unusual hour. Captain slugger and Sergeant Laird spent several hours in the territory trying to locate the stranger or who made the call, which it was believed was simply intended to get him into the house and thereby open opportunities for looting.
