POETRY

APRIL. April, dancing on the hills To the list of song; Thy beauty the springing hills, The sun thy fatal throng!

April, glad with flowering things Come and go with me, Where the wild with balmy wings Woo me to the sea!

April, lass upon the green, Spangled with a silvery shroud, Dancing with delight!

April, princess of the year, Daphne by the fountain side, With sunlight glistening every leaf, A lass just out of school.

April, through the fields I wander by thy side, And every flower thy yield, Its incense far and wide.

Come, April, let us seek the joy, Unmingled with the pain— Come, love, let us be merry, The wild bird's glad refrain.

Yon by the sea I glimpse the mead, Whop lass and lad are gay— Come where Pan pipes with sylvan reed— John Jordan Douglas, in Charleston News.

A SONG OF SPRINGTIME. Inexorable Spring comes on to haunt me, With all her aching ecstasy, And every flower and leaf and tree, Erelong the heart of men.

She spares me nothing, nothing of her laughter, Her golden whim of daffodils, Her calling and her singing down the valley, Her song among the hills.

Nothing she spares me, nothing of her rapturous brooks, her young things growing, Her ever plunging through the tides of men 'Out of the dayspring' flowing.

Years there have been when I could bear the beauty Of budding trees and flashing leaves, Now I am one with trodden leaves and autumn, And all broken things.

—Don Marquis, in the New York Sun.

HUMOR OF THE DAY Lawyer—I would like more time for my client your honor.

Judge—Certainly, I was going to give him five years, but I'll raise it to ten.

First Clubman—After all, there's no place like home.

Second Clubman—Perhaps you're right—It's a damned nuisance getting pretty dry.

First Passenger—Fraid there's dirt weather coming on. Hope you're a good sailor.

Second Passenger—Indeed not, sir. I am a first-class passenger.—Punch (London)

His Wife—Henry, I wish you wouldn't tell our guests what everything costs.

Professed—I'd like to know who's going to tell 'em if I don't.—Judge.

What's the matter, Joe? I haven't noticed you at any of our little parties of late.

—"What's the matter, Joe? I haven't noticed you at any of our little parties of late."—Bill! My wife has taken up bridge.—Wyoming State Tribune.

Ida Instill—A couple of straggle men started at me for half a block this morning.

Old Aunt Patience—It's those immediate clothes you wear. I dare say if I dressed like you every one would turn their heads.

Japanese Sea Trade. The forwardness of Japan as a competitor for sea trade is proved by the estimate made in that country that the earnings of the Japanese shipping industry from foreign sources in 1920 amounted to 249,000,000 yen, or roughly about $100,000,000.

On the other hand, the depression that has recently hung like a pall over shipping in all parts of the world is plainly evidenced by the fact that the Japanese earnings in 1920 were less by 90,000,000 yen than those of 1919, and that the first half of 1920 showed earnings nearly double those for the second half.

In order to meet future competition Japan has been taking steps to cut the costs of ship production and operation. Announcements that Japanese shipbuilders are prepared to execute orders for vessels at $50 a dead-weight ton point clearly to a great decrease in the cost of production, which can be still further brought down if it is true, as reported, that the Government is considering the abolition of the duty on steel timber and machinery.

As for operation, the wages of sailors aboard ship have been drastically reduced, despite the protest of the labor organizations. Here again it was a case of the old, unescapable law of supply and demand. When a crew refused to accept the wage scale offered they were ordered off the ship, and the companies had no trouble in replacing them from the large number of unemployed seamen eager for work.

Strikes were broken by taking on Chinese and Korean sailors, who will likely be accepted from twenty-five to thirty per cent. less than the basic wage of the Japanese.
