Of course, the woman had no trace of knowledge as to where her "gentleman friend" obtained the article and someone else had taken it to give the friend's name—a name which she said she was released upon payment of costs.

William Tarbot, picked up by the local police and held here at the request of Huntington, Ind., is now on his way back to the Hoosier State. Tarbot was taken away Thursday morning in charge of Officer W. A. Wayne of the Huntington police.

Tarbot, eight years in the regular army, has been employed in Webster at his trade of barbering. His wife is a former Putnam girl, a fact that was known in Huntington, and which led to following out what proved to be the correct assumption—that he would eventually come east and into the vicinity.
