DAYLIGHT SAVING FAVORED When the special town meeting was called for it was for the purpose of getting an expression of the people of this community in regard to daylight saving.

There can be no question but what much interest prevails in regard to the subject. There are those who are anxious to avoid the disadvantages which would come with failure to do as others are doing.

The expression of the people in town meeting was desired, and it was obtained. It showed that the majority of the large gathering of voters favor daylight saving.

The decision of the manufacturers and the school board, as understood, is in keeping therewith. It is only reasonable to suppose that the merchants will take a similar view and that daylight saving hours will become effective next week.

A WELCOME RAIN Repeatedly there are times when many of us do not appreciate the rainy days. We may realize that it is needed for the breaking of a drought or the supplying of needed moisture for growing crops.

In all directions and throughout many states there have been woodland fires raging for the past fortnight. Lack of rain and the winds have left a covering of dry material throughout fields and forests which furnish just the kind of fuel needed to permit disastrous fires.

EDITORIAL NOTES You never can tell until the last vote is counted. The man on the corner says: What does a decision amount to if you don't accept it and abide by it?

IN THE PUBLIC EYE James Duncan, sixty-five years old today, is one of the most widely known leaders of organized labor in America.

PROSECUTING WAR FRAUDS Almost since the time when the articles were signed and the work of settling up the government contracts in connection with the war there has been much heard in regard to the alleged frauds that existed in connection with the production of war materials in this country.

When President Harding asks congress for the appropriation of a half million dollars for analyzing and presenting war maps against the government, it may seem a considerable sum of money but it is also accorded with public demand that those who are guilty of any such act should be brought to light and made to pay the penalty.

There can be no disposition to disregard any such cases where the evidence is possessed or obtainable. The administration believes that punishment should be administered where guilt is believed to exist and where there is reasonable assurance of conviction, and such being the case there can be no one connected with the previous administration who would do other than approve such action concerning those who had taken advantage of them in order to get possession of government funds to which they were not entitled.

ARBOR DAY This is the day that has been set apart by proclamation of Governor Lake for Arbor and Bird day. It is a day in which he asks the citizens of Connecticut and especially the teachers and pupils in the public schools, to give careful attention and thought to the value and preservation of our forests as well as the value and protection of the insectivorous and song birds.

It is because such duties as Arbor day is designed to emphasize have been too easily neglected that the demand for directing greater attention to the need has been recognized and the Arbor day plan agreed upon.

It is a half century since the Arbor day idea was launched. During that time it has gained recognition throughout the nation as a movement which serves to direct attention to conditions which cannot be wisely overlooked.

BEVERIDGE'S VICTORY The outcome of the contest between Senator New and former Senator Beveridge in the Indiana primaries indicates clearly the confidence that is being placed in the candidate of the republican party in the November election.

Each one made a thorough campaign of the state. It was a contest in which the administration had maintained the policy of "hands off."

WHY SHE WAS ANNOYED

"Herbert," said the bride with the appealing eyes, "there is something I want to ask you—I just thought of it today, and it's been bothering me considerably. If you hadn't married me, Herbert, whom would you have married?"

"Huh?" asked the startled bridegroom, becoming alert as he felt one when troubled by a question.

"Because you would, you know," went on his fair young wife, determinedly. "Now, Mabel," her perturbed husband interrupted, "if you will stop to think you will realize that I should be in love if this was someone else than you who had married me."

"Mabel," said the bridegroom, pulling her hand away from his eyes, "you are doubting me! I—"

"The trouble is that you are so naturally noble and generous, Herbert," the bride informed him sadly, "you'd cover up your sorrow and never let me know, and when I think that possibly you are just being brave it is more than I can stand. Are you perfectly sure you'd never have married Irma?"

"Perfectly!"

"Then," went on the bride, tragically, "why do you say that? I always have felt that you never told me exactly all about that girl you knew in New York—that Ansonia Hardware. The one you have the picture of. I don't like her face, Herbert. She looks to me like a girl who has absolutely no heart and who would be a regular vampire, and I expect that she could have twisted you around her little finger if you had stayed there a few weeks longer. Yes, I am certain you and Ansonia—"

"Great Scott!" exploded her husband, "I would have married anybody but the last woman on earth! She wears good clothes and is all right to take around—"

"Do you admire a woman who looks stunning," aimed the bride, "and I am so little and insignificant I could almost believe Herbert, that you married me just because you felt sorry for me and knew I cared for you and—"

"I did not!" said the bridegroom. "I married you—"

"This is getting us nowhere," said the bride firmly. "I just have got to know all about that girl!"

FAMOUS MEN.

THOMAS MOORE. Thomas Moore, the popular Irish poet, was close to 40 years of age when he started on the most interesting work of his long career, the writing of a history of his country.

MOORE WAS SUPPOSED TO COMBINE his entire story in one volume, but patriotism prompted him to leave no part of his country's story untouched, and instead of one volume he drew out the history to four, of which the last appeared in 1846, when he was 67 years of age.

OF THIS WORK, SIR JOHN RUSSELL says, "There is no doubt, however, that the purpose of Arbor and Bird day is to be achieved by a general participation."
