Stop here! was the rather peremptory command that the driver heard as "Lassie" panted past a bar-way that was much the same as a score of other barways along the same road.

The driver came to a grinding halt and out jumped the Springfield man, with no loss of time engaged in an active saving of the dirt and leaves that would indicate that he was trying to uncover some long buried article.

Disappointed after a time, he announced that "I guess this is the wrong place" and asked the pilot to drive on a bit further to another barway, where another halt was ordered.

Again the Springfielder was out of the car in a jiffy and at once again engaged in his rapid digging operations, using his hands to clear away an accumulation of grass, a few small stones and some dirt.

And then an exclamation of satisfaction that is the American equivalent of "Eureka!" His companions in the car were, to say the least, amazed at the little "excavation" he had made of the man from Springfield.

Paired radiating glass, this Springfielder who had many "good" times in Danielson in the old days held up the find and fairly radiated delight as he announced that the party with him would be cared for he had demonstrated beyond doubt that his memory is a wonderful one and that he had unearthed a very bit of whiskey that he had buried back in 1883 on an occasion when the party of which he was a member had indulged in a "big" day and had, in his opinion, all they needed, where-with he had planted a half-pint for some day when they might happen along that way to be dug out as a surprise.

Years flew by and he left Danielson and settled in Springfield. Since the advent of prohibition that buried liquor has often been a source of mental disturbance for him and he vowed if he ever came to Danielson he would go and see if it were still safely in his hiding place. So when he came, that was one of the things uppermost in his mind. There was an occasion, however, spent for him in the incident. The years had fixed in his memory that his buried contraband contained a pint—for things grow in memory as in other ways it is averred. His disappointment was only 50 per cent, though, and those who were invited to join in the destruction of the liquid, that it might no longer be a menace to the laws and well-being of the country, assert that he would have only yielded it and left a little mould on the cork and some sediment in the bottom of the bottle.

This is a true story. For obvious reasons, names are not given, but the man from Springfield is known to many of Danielson's residents and not a few of them have heard of how he came back and "dug it up" after twenty years.

Whistles of the strikers from homes owned by the Aldrich Manufacturing Company is the next principal move that seems to be forecasted in the strike situation at Moosup. This means that families who have occupied homes in the company's dwellings for years will be asked to vacate, to make way for those who are willing to come into that town and work for the company under the same conditions that prevailed for workers when the strike was declared.

There is much of pathos in this situation. Families that have been mainstays of Moosup's prosperity and steadiness for years will be numbered among those who will be required to vacate, if the company carries through its reported plan to make its houses available for workers who are willing to work.

It is probable that the field day pilgrims of the members of the Windham County Farmers' association will take them during the coming month to W. S. Brown's Shepard Hill farm, at the village of Villages, where an opportunity will be given to inspect his thoroughbred herd of Holstein-Friesian cattle.

A point crew working for the state highway department will be in this territory within a few days putting broad yellow bands on poles along the Putnam-Chépacet route as far east as the Connecticut-Rhode Island line. These yellow bands will be bordered with black striping and will have a number designating

Yellow bands being painted on poles along the trunk line highway through the business section are not to be taken that a construction gang is permanently engaged in repair work and to "proceed carefully." The color is being applied as part of a scheme to re-mark all trunk line highways in Connecticut for the benefit and convenience of travelers.

The section gang of the New Haven road operating out of Danielson is getting along now with about a 50 per cent force of workers. Usually nine men are employed in the local gang and only four have been working of late, the others quitting work because of dissatisfaction with the work's pay that totals $18.90 for 54 hours of work at Canaan, this state, Tuesday to conduct an auction sale.

Henry A. Hemphill of Lowell was a visitor with friends in Danielson Tuesday. Howard A. Elliott of Hartford called on Danielson friends Tuesday.
