FINDS NORWICH DEATH RATE DROPS IN YEARS OF DRY LAW

In the second of special articles upon Norwich, written after a study of the field here and published in the American Issue, the Anti-Saloon league national organ, figures of the death rate in years under and before prohibition are compared, reaching the conclusion that the death rate has dropped with the coming in of dry law.

By special arrangement, The Bulletin publishes in advance the following article which will appear in next week's number of the American Issue:

"Where once, in the 'good old days,' when the saloons were open and jails, insane asylums, almshouses and graves all were open in the same degree as the saloon—where once five hearses moved in slow processional to Norwich cemeteries, today only four hearses are in the funeral cortege. The death rate has been cut since the advent of prohibition to the degree that five persons per thousand would have to die where four actually die this year to maintain the rate set in the 'wet' year, 1917. That year, however, was not the record year for deaths in Norwich. It is chosen for an illustration because it is a fair year and not an abnormally high one. The year 1918 was of course the influenza year, with a death rate of 26.4; 1915, also a 'wet' year, had a death rate of 19.7, but 1917, the last normal year which was 'wet,' had a rate of 19.1. The rate for 1922, if the same proportion of deaths prevails for the full 12 months as in the first eight months, will be 15.1.

"This means that out of every thousand persons in the town of Norwich four persons who were doomed to death by conditions prevailing under a license regime are reprieved by prohibition.

"The death rate in 1922—if no epidemic occurs to increase the present proportion—will be the lowest in 20 years. The average rate for Norwich town in the years from 1901 to 1905, inclusive, was 16.9. In the next five years the rate decreased to 16.6 per thousand of population. From this year the rate steadily increased, with one or two exceptions.

The five years from 1911 to 1915 had an average rate of 17.3. The succeeding years, with their rates, follow:

1916	1917	1918	1919	1920	1921	1922
18.1	19.1	26.4	17.7	19.3	16.5	15.1

"The 1922 rate is based on the eight-month period, extended to cover a full 12 months.

"These figures may seem dry but they are like fossils in the rocks, each carrying a perfectly legible story to the one who holds the key. The first three years in the table above are all 'et' years. The rate was very high. It was far above the average rate for the state of Connecticut as a whole. Health experts in many cities had pointed out that besides deaths listed officially as due to alcoholism there were a large number of preventable deaths for which alcohol was to blame. To this was attributed the high death rate in urban communities as opposed to rural sections. So far as published records go, however, no one in Norwich seemed to have been disturbed by this mounting death rate. No doubt in home after home someone said, 'The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away,' when the Lord didn't have anything to do with it.

"During these years beer and whiskey were selling at the usual price in Norwich. But the usual price didn't tell the whole story. To the five cents for beer or the ten cents for whiskey, no one added the funeral bill of the dead from alcohol; nor the hospital expenses of the wounded from John Barleycorn; nor the pension for the almshouse and the charity fund for the disabled of the saloon.

"Then came 1919. This was the year in which, on July 1, wartime prohibition became effective. It was a half dry and a half wet year. The death rate drops—just as the unheeded Cassandras of prohibition had always prophesied—dropped from 19.1 in 1917 (ignoring the abnormal rate in the 'wet' influenza year 1918) to 17.7. The saloons were closed. All the usual channels whereby intoxicants were obtained were gone.

"The next year saw the Volstead act become effective in January. This gave federal officers power to act but the local police lacked authority. Illicit selling developed an organization in Norwich as elsewhere and registered its effect on the delicate meter of the vital statistics. The mortality rate climbed back again to the highest point it had reached since 1915 and registered 19.3 deaths per thousand. It was a good year for those who believed in 'personal liberty'—provided they were in the undertaking business.

"1921 saw an improvement. The difficulty of obtaining drinkable intoxicants, the wholesome fear of blindness or death from wood alcohol, the unwillingness of the average man to take all the trouble, undergo the risks and pay the exorbitant prices demanded, all reduced the consumption of alcoholic beverages in Norwich in this year. Added to this, was the effect of the passage of the state enforcement act, which placed a much-needed weapon in the hands of the police. In the table above you can read all this story. The death rate fell once more—with an increased degree of enforcement—to 16.5.

"The illicit dealers in liquor had plenty of time in which to develop their system. Sources of supply, means of transportation and methods of distribution had been developed by them increasingly from the day when wartime prohibition arrived. Such systems require time to develop. The police in Norwich as elsewhere develop in turn their system. This also requires time. With successive months, the police system becomes increasingly effective. Backed by the support of the decent and law-abiding element of the community, it ultimately controls the situation. It was so in Norwich. This, too, is written in the table above.

"In the current year the death rate fell again to a figure which constitutes a record for the community. In the first eight months of this year there have been 310 deaths. Should the same ratio prevail for the balance of the year, the death rate for 1922 will be 15.1.

"Prohibition is not complete in Norwich any more than elsewhere. It has become more effective each year, but full enforcement has not yet been obtained. Drunkenness has decreased greatly, but there are still some avenues by which strong drink reaches both town and city. With the closing of these sewers of death, the death rate will drop still more."

New American Flyweight King

(COPYRIGHT KEYSTONE VIEW CO., NEW YORK)

Pancho Villa, the amazing fighting Oriental from the Philippines, is the new American flyweight champion. It took him eleven rounds to grab the title from game little Johnny Buff, at Ebbetts Field, Brooklyn, N. Y., in one of the most sensational bouts ever held. Buff was floored three times in the 10th round, and after that it was all over for poor Johnny. The former titleholder was no match for the whirlwind from the Orient, who came to the slug fest with the certainty of winning.

WOMAN FATALLY BURNED IN LISBON FARMHOUSE

Mrs. William Kamenskice was burned at her home on a farm in Lisbon Friday morning and died at the Backus hospital here at 2.15 in the afternoon. Her husband was so badly burned that it is feared he cannot recover and their six-months-old child was also burned, but will recover. The father and child are patients at the hospital.

The family live in the Newent section of Lisbon. While the woman was getting breakfast Friday morning she poured kerosene from a gallon can on the fire. She was enveloped in burning oil in the explosion that followed and her husband was badly burned in smothering the fire in the clothing of his wife and child.

The house also caught fire but was saved by a bucket brigade, headed by Rev. William J. Reynolds of the Newent church. The three members of the family were rushed to the hospital after they had been given first attention by a doctor.

GAVE TALK ON GARDENS BEFORE WOMAN'S GUILD

The Woman's Guild of the United Congregational church held the opening meeting of the season Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Community house, when members and their friends had the pleasure of listening to Miss Amy Cogswell, principal of the Lowthorpe School of Horticulture, Groton, Mass. Miss Cogswell's subject, "What To Do With the Small Place," was treated in a most practical and helpful manner, calculated to inspire the humblest amateur. The day of vast gardens is past, she said, and her special plea was in behalf of small retired gardens with the beauty, rest and happiness which may be found in planning for and working in them.

At the conclusion of the talk, tea was served by the social activities department, Mrs. Walter F. Lester and Mrs. Archibald Mitchell, Jr., presiding at the table.

The regular busines meeting, at which the president, Mrs. Charles Tyler Bard, presided, was abridged in order to allow all who wished to attend the sale of the Missions department in progress at Park church.

GRIEVING MOTHER'S DEATH, GIRL ATTEMPTED SUICIDE

New York, Oct. 13—Grief over the death of her mother caused fourteen year old Anetto Rullo to attempt suicide today in the presence of her father and younger brothers and sisters.

After preparing lunch for the family the child walked into the dining room of her Bronx home, stated that she was going to "join mamma" and swallowed a potion of poison.

After administering antidotes physicians said the girl would recover.

DISABLED TRUCK JAMMED TRAFFIC ON WILLIMANTIC ROAD

The worst traffic jam on the William crossing section of the Willimantic road since highway work was started there a few weeks ago took place Thursday afternoon, when a truck broke down when it was passing along the section of the road which is used for traffic and which is wide enough for only one car at a time.

Cars are allowed to go through in groups alternately from each direction. When the truck broke down on the way through it made a complete blockade for hundreds of cars for over an hour as it was impossible to drive on the soft cement on the other half of the road and the whole assemblage of cars had to wait until the truck could get under way again.

Sensitive Tobacco.

Havana tobacco is the most delicate and sensitive of any tobacco grown. You can test this by subjecting a box of Havana cigars to extremes of heat or cold, moisture or dryness. The best temperature for Havana cigars is 60 degrees Fahrenheit. You may get a box of a good brand and find it a failure. But before you condemn the brand be sure that it is not the fault of the dealer, says a tobacco expert.

POETRY

THE GREEN ISLE OF LOVERS.

They say that, afar in the land of the west,
Where the bright, golden sun sinks in glory to rest,
Mid ferns where the hunter ne'er ventured to tread,
A fair lake, unruffled and sparkling, is spread,
Where, lost in his course, the rapt Indian discovers,
In distance seen dimly, the green Isle of Lovers

There verdure fades never; immortal in bloom,
Soft waves the magnolia its groves of perfume;
And low bends the branch with rich fruitage depressed,
All glowing like gems in the crown of the east;
There the bright eye of nature in mild glory hovers;
'Tis the land of the sunbeam—the green Isle of Lovers.

Sweet strains wildly float on the breezes that kiss
The calm-flowing lake round that region of bliss,
Where wreathing their garlands of amaranth, fair choirs
Glad measures still weave to the sound that inspires
The dance and the revel mid forests that cover
On high with their shade the green Isle of the Lover.

But fierce as the snake, with his eyeballs of fire,
When his scales are all brilliant and glowing with ire,
Are the warriors to all save the maids of the isle,
Whose law is their will and whose life is their smile;
From beauty there valor and strength are not rovers,
And peace reigns supreme on the green Isle of Lovers.

And he who has sought to set foot on its shore,
In mazes perplexed, ha beheld it no more;
It fleet on the vilon, deluding the view,
Its banks still retire as the hunters pursue;
O! who in this vain world of woe shall discover
The home undisturbed, the green Isle of the Lover!

—Robert Charles Sands, in Indianapolis News.

OLD-FASHIONED FLOWERS.

Where are the dear, old-fashioned posies,
Quaint in form and bright in hue,
Such as grandma gave her lovers
When she walked the garden through?

Lavender, with spikes of azure
Pointing to the dome on high,
Telling thus whence came its color,
Thanking with its breath the sky.

Four o'clock, with heart unfolding,
When the loving sun had gone,
Streak and stain of cunning crimson
Like the light of early dawn.

Regal lilies, many-petalled,
Like the curling drifts of snow,
With their crown of golden anthers
Poised on malachite below.

Morning-glories, tents of purple,
Stretched on bars of creamy white,
Folding up their satin curtains
Inward through the dewy night.

Marigold, with coat of velvet,
Streaked with gold and yellow lace,
With its love for summer sunlight
Written on its honest face.

Dainty pink, with feathered petals,
Tinted, curled, and deeply frayed,
With its calyx heat, half broken,
On its leaves uplifted laid.

Can't you see them in the garden,
Where dear grandma takes her nap?
See cherry blooms shake softly over
Silver hair and snowy cap?

Will the modern florist's triumph
Look so fair or smell so sweet
As those dear, old-fashioned posies
Blooming round our grandma's feet?

—Ethel Lynn Beers.

Wealthy collectors searching in Egypt for treasures and relics are often imposed on by crafty Arabs, who manufacture mummies, using the bodies of their own dead, which they swathe in the mummy windings and encase in stolen, or spurious mummy cases. The duped collector, after secretly negotiating with a mysterious Arab, is led to an abandoned pyramid, where the fake mummy is discovered. Then the Arab aids the collector in smuggling the mummy out of Egypt, so the Egyptian authorities, who examine all relics taken out of the country, may not reveal his swindle.
