The liberties which the London newspapers sometimes take with "Great men," is exemplified by the following—

Grand Ministerial Council on the Affairs of Ireland.

[SPECIALLY REPORTED FOR "GIOVANNI IN LONDON."] On the arrival of old De Gray and Sugden simultaneously in town, we immediately communicated to our Ministerial reporter (who shall be nameless) our desire that he should be on the look out for a grand "palaver," which as we anticipated took place, and was reported to us accordingly.

When our reporter reached the Foreign Office, he found assembled the following illustrious and anxious personages: Wellington, Peel, Lyndhurst, Graham, Knatchbull, Gladstone, Brougham, (who had slipped in unperceived,) De Grey, Sugden, Sir Frederic Pollock, and divers of the small fry. Emerson Tennant acted as "Tyler," attired tastefully in plush breeches and a scarlet coat. Wellington sat as usual, with his hat crushed down very decidedly upon his nose, and his coat buttoned tightly, while De Grey seemed particularly nervous and uneasy, and changed positions with incredible velocity.

At two o'clock the business commenced as follows: Wellington. Tell that gaby in plush to shut the door, and not place his d-d ear to the keyhole. (This bland intimation having been conveyed to Tennant, was immediately obeyed.) And now, why do ye all sit like wig blocks, when you know that our business is to take measures to put down this infernal O'Connell?

De Grey. Ye-es, to be sure. Oh very true—that is, as your Grace says, all that we have to do—quite correct.

Wellington. To be sure, it's quite correct. Do you suppose that I want you to endorse it? If you had not been an ass, we need not have been in this confounded fix.

Lyndhurst. That, also, is quite correct. Wellington. I say, Peel, what the devil are you staring at the ceiling for, like a moon-calf? If ever you intend saying any thing to the point, you must do it now. We can stand no humbug about the exigencies of the public service here, my boy.

Peel. In reply to the question of the illustrious Duke, and viewing the case in all its bearings, I am not at present prepared to say more than if any member of the Council has any thing to suggest, the heads of Her Majesty's Government will give it their most profound consideration.

Wellington. Now, Peel, once for all, if you have nothing to say, say nothing, and don't aggravate me with your confounded twaddle. If any man among you has any brains, let him suggest something, or go home out of my sight. At the same time I should tell you that my opinion is, that there is nothing for it but a fight.

Brougham. My lords—for I believe I am, by ancient precedents, right in calling you Lords of the Council—I shall in a brief and lucid manner deliver to you my opinion upon this most puzzling, perplexing, annoying, worrying, and intricate subject. It is known to you, my lords, that when I left the degraded, battered, shattered, shipwrecked, upset, overturned, prostrate, iniquitous, contemptible, disreputable, grovelling, and disgusting Whig administration, their lying, slandering falsehood-dealing, truth-smothering, secret-fishing, foul-mouthed, and murderous press had the unexampled, unheard of, unparalleled, and unprecedented iniquity, audacity, temerity, and foolhardiness to say, asseverate, print, and assert, that I was hurled, trundled, and kicked out of the Cabinet by the express wish, aspiration, and desire of his late Majesty King William the Fourth.

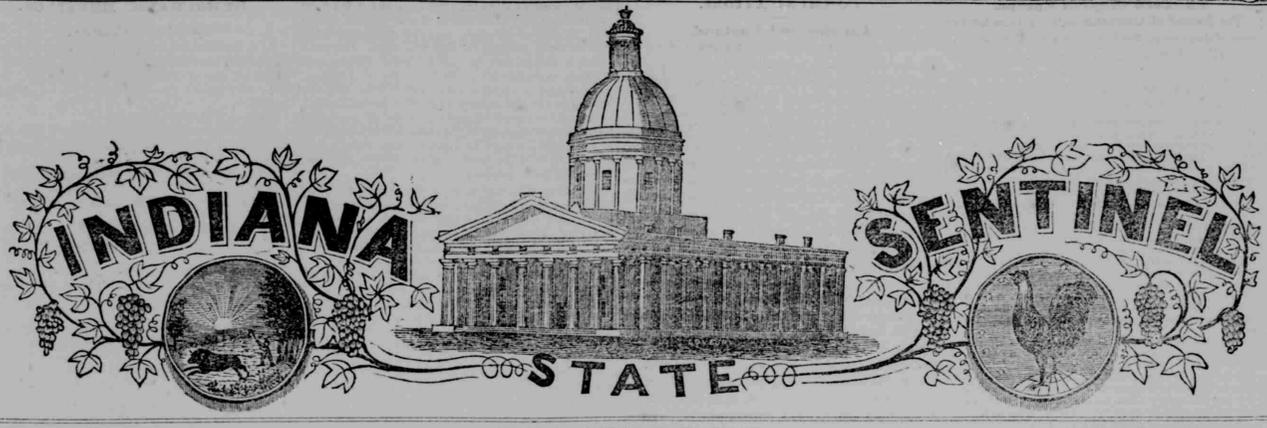

Wellington. If he didn't, he ought, and I've a devilish good mind to take the hint. Do you imagine that we've come here to hear how often you've been kicked? Hold your jaw!

Graham. I have been thinking that if we could send over the Earl De Grey and the Lord Chancellor express, with instructions to proclaim down the Repealers, and if they did not separate to shoot them, it would perhaps suit very well.

De Grey. Come, I say, don't talk that way. You don't know how queer it makes me feel, you really don't. Besides, you can't mean it.

Wellington. Can't lie, by—! I tell you he does mean it, and over you'll go, once I have got the proclamation. Pollock, have you got a pen?

De Grey. Now really your Grace, pray don't. You know what they'll do to me: I'll attempt such a thing—very likely surround that rickety old castle, and make me a public example—run me through with a pike. Oh, my God!
