achieved, and having tasted the sweets of freedom, they became clamorous for a larger portion. Thus will the States and Principalities of Europe be in a continual state of turmoil and ferment, perhaps, for some years—like the earth, heaving in all directions, previous to the occurrence of an earthquake. At length the combustible matter will have vent; a tremendous explosion will take place. The lava of England's bankruptcy will overpread the European world, overwhelming kings and aristocracies, but cementing the democratic interest as it flows. Trust me, Las Cases, that, as from the vines planted in the soil which encrusts the sides of Etna and Vesuvius the most delicious wine is obtained, so shall the lava of which I speak prove to be the only soil in which the tree of liberty will take firm and permanent root. May it flourish for ages! You, perhaps, consider these sentiments strange and unusual; they are mine, however. I was a Republican, but fate and the opposition of Europe made me an Emperor. I am now a spectator of the future!"

MARRIED IN SPITE OF THEIR TEETH.—Old Governor Saltonstall of Connecticut, who flourished some forty years since, was a man of some humor, as well as perseverance, in effecting the ends he desired. Among other anecdotes told of him by the New London people, the place where he resides, is the following: Of the various sects which have flourished for their day, and then ceased to exist, was one known as the Rogerites, so called from their founder, a John, or Tom, or some other Rogers, who settled not far from the goodly town aforesaid.

The distinguished tenor of the sect was their denial of the propriety and spirituality of form of marriage. "It is not good for man to be alone." This they believed, and also that one wife only should "cleave to her husband," but then this should be a matter of agreement merely, and the couple should live as man and wife, dispensing with all forms of marriage covenant. The old governor used frequently to call upon Rogers and talk the matter over with him, and endeavor to convince him of the impropriety of living with Sarah as he did. But they would not give up the argument.

It was a matter of conscience with them—they were very happy together as they were—of what use they could a mere form be! Suppose they would thereby escape scandal; were they not bound to take up the cross, and live according to the rules they professed? The Governor's logic was powerless. He was in the neighborhood of John one day, and meeting with him, accepted an invitation to dine with him. The conversation as usual turned upon the old subject.

"Now, John," says the governor, after a debate of the point, "why will you not marry Sarah? Have you not taken her to be your lawful wife?" "Yes, certainly," replied John, "but my conscience will not permit me to marry her, in the forms of the world's people." "Very well. But you love her?" "Yes." "And respect her?" "Yes." "And cherish her, as bone of your bone, and flesh of your flesh?" "Yes, certainly, I do!" "Turning to her the Governor said: "And you love him, and obey him, and respect him, and cherish him?" "Certainly, I do."

"Then cried the governor, rising, "in the name of the laws of God, and of the commonwealth of Connecticut, I pronounce you to be husband and wife!" The ravings and rage of John and Sarah were of no avail—the knot was tied by the highest authority of the State.

Said Augustus, as he gazed from Mrs. Partridge's little window, his finger pensively resting upon a cracked china teapot upon the sill.—"Here is a spot in which to cultivate the flowers of poetry; here the imagination may soar on unrestricted wing; here banyan zephyrs, rising from embowering roses, waft ambrosial sweets!"—"Them is beans planted in the window," said the old lady, interrupting him; "what you say is very true; there's nothing better for a sore than banyan-gled buds in rum; and it's so handy to have 'em in a temperance neighborhood, too, where people are too good to keep rum in the house themselves, but leave it to be borried of the neighbors. How glad I am always to have it for 'em. They are so kind, too, always advising me to give up keeping it in the house; but dear me! what would the poor creatures do if I should? I may be committing sin in keeping it, but a bad use of a thing makes all the trouble after all." Augustus was moved; but there was so much of the "earth earthy" in her remarks, that he was silent. "I should like to know what he meant about embowling roses," murmured she to herself; "peppermint would be better if he has the cholick." She looked at him earnestly, but there seemed no token of pain, and she forbore to speak.—[Boston Post.

"I won't be blind, and I won't die." Such were the memorable words of a celebrated English Duchess to her physician, who supposed her on her death-bed. She kept her word, and lived to a great age.
