LEAGUE AGAINST LAW.

Later accounts of the Mussel Slough tragedy do not tend to make the details any clearer, and it still remains undetermined by which party the firing was commenced.

The statements on this head are conflicting. One is to the effect that Crow and Hartt both sprang from their wagons together, and began firing. Another is to the effect that the first shot was fired by one of the settlers, that it struck Hartt, and that he did not fire at all.

The evidence of Deputy United States Marshal Pool, and that of Clark, the grader, is not at all decisive as regards the opening of the fight. Pool says he was knocked down by one of the settlers' horses, and that while he was down the firing began.

Clark says that his horses ran away the instant the first shots were fired, and he could not say who fired first. It is stated that the position and direction of Hartt's wagon seem to support the assertion that he was shot while sitting in the wagon, and if this is so the probability that the settlers opened the fight will be strengthened.

It is to be presumed that the Settlers' League will not be permitted to set laws at defiance, and establish an imperium in imperio on their own account, and that therefore the whole case will be made the subject of judicial inquiry in due time.

It is however necessary to meet the studied attempts which are being made in certain quarters to create sympathy for these men, by emphasizing the fact that they have from the first manifested a set purpose to defy the law, and that the tragic events which have just occurred are but the culmination of a long course of lawlessness on their part.

It is also proper to point out that the arguments they use are not supported by the facts in the case. They have, so far as any trustworthy evidence goes, been treated with a patience and moderation which they have never shown the least appreciation of.

That they have shown a determination to hold on to lands which belong to other people, regardless of all judicial decisions, that they have refused to avail themselves of the opportunities repeatedly afforded them of acquiring lawful possession of the disputed lands, and that the League which they have organized can be regarded in no other light than as a machinery for overruling the law by brute violence, and of retaining possession of property their title to which has been declared altogether invalid.

To the public opinion which the railroad company ought to have waited still longer before resorting to summary processes, we reply that there was no reason whatever for such procrastination. It had become perfectly apparent that the settlers were resolved to resist the law, and there could not have been any ground for supposing that a postponement of action would produce any change in their policy.

The men who had bought some of the lands in good faith demanded possession of their purchases, and it became impossible to resist their importunities. They had a right to make this demand, and it was incumbent on the company to put them in possession.

With such a lawless organization as the Settlers' League it is plain enough that the collision must have occurred, no matter when the attempt was made to enforce the law.

It is not for the interests of Society that there should be any confusion of thought in regard to a matter of this kind. It will never do to let men set up their own version of a story against the judgments of Courts, as this settles for or palliates the enormity of the crime.
