Burke was returned by a train two days ago last July at the foot of L street, in this city, and lost a leg, for which he sued the company for $50,000 damages, bringing suit in the Superior Court of San Francisco. The complainant claimed that he was on an flat car and was pushed off by a brakeman, and thus thrown under the train. The company produced testimony tending to prove that Burke was intoxicated at the time of the accident; that he was not on the flat car, and the brakeman who was charged with pushing him off of the car was in a caboché changing his clothes at the time, and did not see him. At the conclusion of the case, the jury returned a verdict for defendants.
