The new building, which is the work of the room formerly occupied by Justice Haines' Court, on Fourth street, will be used as a mailing room, for making up the mail, until the new building is completed. The new quarters have been finished. The southern part of the building, which is to be still occupied as the delivery office, will be left until the last. The entire premises are to be renovated, with new floors, new plaster, and tastefully finished and newly-furnished throughout.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The evangelical work of series of union meetings, under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, opened last night with two services at the same hour, one at the Congregational Church and the other at the Sixth-street M. E. Church. The meetings to follow for the present be held at the Congregational Church, whose arrangements have been made for them. The pulpit platform has been extended, so as to enable the seating of a larger choir upon it, to aid the singing evangelists. This platform was last evening occupied by a large number of singers from all the churches and many others. At the front of it stood the small organ used in the service of song, and arranged about the platform were some large vases of beautiful vines and flowers. At 7 o'clock, the hour appointed for the opening of the services, every seat of the church was filled, and all available space in the auditorium and gallery, together with the outer rooms and approaches, were thronged with members of the various evangelical denominations of the city, and very large reinforcements of citizens in whose hearts the occasion had excited a religious interest. Large numbers failed to gain even standing room and went away.

There was a strong feeling of expectation in the minds of those present. A praise service of half an hour, led by the choir, preceded the regular services, at the close of which Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, with song and the choir and congregation hymn No. 196, "More Love to Thee, Oh Christ," Dr. De Ross, sang. Mr. Stebbins then related an incident of a Scotch divine who wrote upon the pavement in front of his house the words "Evangelism," in large letters, and as people passed by they involuntarily stop and go around it. This made such an impression upon them that some of the officers of his church chided the word in the stone, where it remains till the present time. Think he said, angels in heaven are doing the same thing, and they are exceedingly effective. There was a strong feeling of expectation in the minds of those present. Mr. Stebbins possesses a clear, resonant voice, and sings with very distinct enunciation, making each word of the song distinctly heard. His style of singing may be characterized as dramatic, and is exceedingly effective. There was a hushed stillness over the audience as the song was rendered, and at its close a perceptible sensation of gratification and a feeling of strong solemnity.

This was followed by reading of Scriptures by Henry Smith, and a prayer, in which he exhorted the congregation to "Will a man rob God?" Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins then sang "Behold that manner of love, after which My Heart is drawn," which was very sweetly sung by the body, the powers of thought, of feeling, of conscience and the will to God. He began by stating that every other object in the world met the object for which it was created, except man, and that man in consequence of his fallen nature has had to undergo various other expedients to satisfy the longings of his soul. He spoke in severe criticism of the low level of the times, and professed Christians; that the weaker their moral power, their enjoyment of religion, and their ability to serve God acceptably, and in conclusion said that the only way in which people can rise to their true position in life is in the service of God.

The meeting was then closed with a song, "Home for Jesus," by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins. At the Sixth-street M. E. Church there was a very large attendance, the church being filled as to its seating capacity and many being compelled to stand. The exercises were opened by a voluntary by the choir, followed by prayer, reading of Scripture and an invocation by Rev. Mr. De Ross.
