

YOUTH AND NATURE

In this the sky, and this the earth... I had seen pleasure in a form I was young?

JACOB'S INSURANCE.

It resulted in a lawsuit. The culmination was on the sixth day of September, 1881—that strange yellow day that attracted so much attention in the Eastern and Middle States—and the place of the trial was Albany.

On the 17th day of September, of the year previous to that of the yellow day, Jacob was awakened in the night. He heard his pigs squealing and "bucking," as he termed it, against his house.

A week later Jacob's small barn, four rods south of his house, burned. It was in the daytime, in the afternoon. Jacob came back from Albany at 5 o'clock and saw only the vacancy.

The insurance policy "had all about the barn" in it. Jacob therefore went to "Silas" at the Cove, and made application for an award.

"I didn't know you had an enemy, Jacob," said old William Kamfer, just after the fire.

"I didn't either," said Jacob gloomily. "There was comfort in the fact that the property had been insured. The day after the burning, Jacob went to the Cove and made his application."

"Something seems to be after you, Jacob," said Silas, eying him keenly.

"Yes," wrote the required papers, and said the committee would meet on the 20th of September, 1881, it is decided, in view of all the circumstances that the award will be made.

"That is the meaning of it," said the lawyer. Jacob was silent. The old family name, distinguished for honesty, was at stake, as well as the property.

The papers were served in November, and in January the cause was on the calendar at the Albany circuit of the Supreme Court of the State.

ment of the recess until morning with a warning to the jury not to allow any one to talk with them about the case.

"You'd better look sharp," said the large man. "Why?" inquired Jacob, wonderingly, as he paused.

"Rough business burning down buildings," said the large man, harshly; and he closed the door of his room with a bang.

There he talked over the events of the day with his wife. When he tried to sleep that night, the Assembly Chamber and the face of the large man in room No. 239 haunted him.

In the morning, after breakfast, down in the front hall, Jacob met the large man again.

"Try a twist at it to day, a'pose," said the large man sharply, to Jacob.

"Yes, the trial," answered Jacob, nervously.

"Somebody has been committing an awful crime," observed the large man. "Have you seen the sky?"

"Yes, it is a dreadful sight," said Jacob, not perceiving the connection.

"They say it is the end of the world—Sodom and Gomorrah," said the large man; and he turned and walked away.

At 10 o'clock the Court convened. As Jacob approached the Capitol steps, he saw a chubby person on the brick pavement at the foot of the steps explaining to a group of people his views of the weather.

"I don't think myself," said the chubby person, glancing at the yellow canopy, "that it is anything supernatural, but I think it is the end of the world."

me for?" asked Jacob timidly, shuddering as he saw the girl.

"Why, my dear, good fellow," said the large man, "what do you care, do you suppose I was watching you for?"

"Thank you," said Jacob huskily.

"You and your father before you have lived in our town too long to be treated in this way," said the President, wiping a tear from his eye.

One by one Jacob's old neighbors and various members of the company dropped in, and went through with about the same formula the President had indulged in.

After a good dinner Jacob began to feel himself again. With an old friend and neighbor he went up to the Capitol once more, as a matter of curiosity.

"I think the jury must have agreed," suggested Jacob faltering. "I see it is all dark in their room."

"Sir," said the large man, glaring at him, and speaking with a withering severity in his tone and manner that made Jacob shrink as if he had received the cut of a whip-lash.

"What was the night that followed to Jacob Wilson?" The man had suddenly lost his good name perhaps he understood it.

"I don't know," said Jacob, "I don't know what the jury did, but I know what the large man did."

"I don't know what the jury did, but I know what the large man did," said Jacob, "I don't know what the jury did, but I know what the large man did."
