THE GAIN OF SUNDAY REST.—Of course I do not mean that man will not produce more in a week by working seven days than by working six days. I mean that he will produce much more at the end of the year, he will generally have produced more by working seven days a week, and I firmly believe that at the end of twenty years he will have produced less by working seven days a week than by working six days a week. The natural difference between Campania and Spitzbergen is trifling when compared with the difference between a country inhabited by men full of bodily and mental vigor and a country inhabited by men sunk in bodily and mental decrepitude. Therefore it is we are not poorer, but richer, because we have, through many ages, rested from our labor on seven days in seven. That day is not lost. While industry is suspended, while the plow lies in the furrow, while the exchange is silent, while no smoke ascends from the factory, a process is going on quite as important to the wealth of the nation as any process which is performed on more busy days. Man, the machine of machines—the machine compared with which all the contrivances of Waste and Akwright are worthless—is repairing and winding up, so that he returns to his labor on Monday with a clearer intellect, with livelier spirits, and with renewed corporal vigor. [Lord Macclesfield.]

AN UNEXPECTED LOAN.—A benevolent-looking gentleman stood on the steps of the Continental Hotel about 9 o'clock last evening, chewing a toothpick in a contemplative manner. A small boy, attired in a pair of trousers turned up at the bottoms, a very dingy shirt, and a pair of shoes which were evidently made for the Chinese giant, approached him, and with a piteous whine besought the benevolent-looking gentleman to buy a newspaper from a small bundle he carried, alleging that he was "stuck with 'em." The gentleman removed his toothpick and remarked in a voice full of human kindness, "I should be glad to relieve your embarrassment, but I haven't a cent about me." "If you haven't a cent," responded the ragged boy, with inoffensive scorn in his tone, "I'll lend you one." At the same time, extending the coin in his dirty paw. The benevolent gentleman reached for it, looked at it for a moment, and then remarking, "Thank you, my boy," dropped it into his pocket and disappeared within the hotel, leaving the newspaper a prey to rage and stupefaction. [Philadelphia Press.]

THEIR'S VINDICATION.—The reports of this preparation as a prophylactic contagion fever is said to have arisen from the confession of four thieves, who, during the plague at Marseilles, plundered the dead bodies with perfect security, and, upon being arrested, stated, on their trial, that they were being spread, that the use of aromatic vinegar had preserved them from the influence of contagion. It is on this account sometimes called "Le vinaigre des quatre voleurs." It was, however, long used before the plague of Marseilles, for it was the constant custom of Cardinal Wolsey to carry in his hand an orange deprived of its contents and filled with a sponge which had been soaked in vinegar impregnated with various spices, in order to preserve himself from infection when passing through the crowds which his splendor or office attracted. The first plague report in 1604, whereas Wolsey died in 1533.—[Percival's Elements of Materia Medica.]

FORGOT TO PUT HER IN.—A few days ago an old woman upwards of ninety years of age died at a place called Elington, near London. The usual arrangements for the funeral were made, and the coffin was closed and taken in a hearse to the place of interment, where the service was duly gone through, the coffin lowered, and the grave filled in. On going home, however, the relatives of the deceased were amazed to find the corpse of the old woman lying on the bed upon which she had expired. The mistake in forgetting to put her in the proper time necessitated the expense of a second funeral.
