

From his cradle to his grave man relies for his happiness upon the love of woman, says a Southern writer. His life, his joy, his very life, depends blindly upon the mother love that nurses his infant years, tends his childhood, trains his youth, and rejoices in his manhood. Infinitely holy, utterly self-sacrificing, pure, and knowing the heights of it, providing its strength, seeing its alienation of self, men call it divine—and so realize the love of God unto all humanity. Yet even from this font of exquisite tenderness they turn their steps to love more abundant, more entrancing, more absorbing; they leave all and cling to their wives, possessing in them every thing. Wonderful and peculiar is the great mingling of human hearts, of organisms irresistibly attached, with souls that feel with and for each other, two brains forming one mind, of two lives and loves from which spring other lives and loves and yet another love—parental affection. This is true marriage, and in this state woman is most lovely. Standing on an equal with her husband, she is adviser and assistant—the sharer of his happiness and his troubles, his helpmate, his comfort, his joy.

That there are marriages far different from this is true, most unhappily; but even here woman shows her power—her evil if she chooses to curse, or good, if she desires to bless and enable the life they brought beneath her personal influence. A great poet says that: As the husband is the wife is, that art mated with a crown. And the greatness of his nature will weigh to drag her down.

This is entirely fallacious. It will always be the strongest test whether their strength be of intellectual or moral force, and a woman of mind and refinement, of honorable nature, of integrity, could not fail to modify and even correct the materiality that may exist in her husband's thoughts, feelings or actions, as his very coarseness would serve to lessen his power. A wife need not sink to the level of the "clown" to whom she is "mated." She can raise him, perhaps slowly, but surely, to her own level. Her influence first touch his heart—through pity, through shame, or even through his mere passions—but once possess power over that, and it will not be difficult to influence the brain. If the soul can be made to respond to beautiful and noble aims, the battle is won. It may take a lifetime, but a woman can afford to spend even a lifetime in such ennobling endeavor.

A man finds his warmest, his most tender, his most loving and his most faithful, his most interested, his most sympathetic interest, her cheerful looks, her many little womanly ways that make all her surroundings in harmony with herself. If weary, her sensible, sweet talk reads him of his own faults, and his own sins and ways to cheer him. If too early, her sound common sense gives him the needed balance. The lump of friendship burns clear and bright between man and woman—lit by an emotion springing from the best impulses of human nature.—See below.

Devastating Power of Locusts.

A swarm of these insects stopped the advance of a Legionary army. They filled the air, and blinded both officers and men, so that the former could give no orders, and, even if they had done so, the men could not have obeyed them. The horses could not face them, and they lay on the ground many inches thick. Every man and horse in the army was encircled with the insects, and their clothing was literally eaten off the men as they stood helpless and blinded. The railways were useless, as they became covered with the insects, and all which exuded from their bodies when crushed prevented the driving-wheels from "biting." After they had settled, whole regiments were detached for the purpose of tramping them to death. From the very day that the locusts swarmed with burning ovens, and the crowding swarms actually smothered the fire, so vast were their numbers. Even in a little island like Cyprus, in 1852, one-fifth of the entire revenue was spent in destroying the locusts, and especially their eggs. When these eggs are laid, they are inclosed in a horny envelope called a "pod," each pod containing thirty-five eggs. In seven months 1,500 tons of pods are destroyed, and a single ton of pods contains 60,000,000 eggs, and yet, in spite of this almost incredible destruction, the locusts are still a dread pest, and show little, if any, symptoms of diminution in numbers. The Arabs say that the dark locusts are the wings of the locusts of the East, and that their significance is as follows: "We are the lay army of the great God. Each of us lay army-mine eggs. If we laid the hundredth we should destroy the world." Not long ago I saw a letter from a gentleman who wrote that he had seen a locust in the Garden of Eden was a paradise. In the afternoon it was blackened and withered, as if a fire had swept over it. Unquestionably he used the very same language that the prophet Joel employed some 2,000 years ago. "A fire devoured them before them, and behind them a flame burned; and the land is as the Garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness."

A Sea Cucumber.

Yesterday there was quite a sensation created on Sullivan's island by the capture of a fish of a genus hitherto unknown in our waters. It was beached by the waves, and was taken by a party of ladies, who were unable to satisfy themselves as to what manner of fish it was until one of the party, a lady from Michigan now visiting the island, and whose knowledge of ichthyology is by no means limited, threw light on the subject. The fish, being a species known as sea cucumber, and by any means, the only remarkable feature of its capture being the locality in which it was found. The fish is an oval, elongated, tropical water, and it is the first ever caught in our harbor. In size it is about six inches long, and is shaped very much like a cucumber, from which it takes its name. It has neither fins nor feet, but swims by the motion of its body, as an eel does, its body being very supple, considering its bulk. It has a large mouth, which is surrounded by a soft fuzzy fringe. It will eat almost anything, and can be easily kept in an aquarium for weeks with proper attention.—[Charles News and Courier.]

The Hawaiian Islands boast of two natural wonders, the largest extinct and the largest active volcano in the world. The former, Haleakala, is situated on the Island of Maui, the summit being 11,000 feet above the level of the sea. The crater is, I believe, over forty-eight miles in circumference. You could drop New York into it and still have some desirable corners left for Chicago and San Francisco. As you stand on the summit you look down into the crater 2,000 feet, the sides now terraced and covered with sandalwood, giant ferns, and a wonderful profusion of tropical flowers and fruits.

The latter, the active volcano of Keleuan, is situated on Hawaii, thirty miles from Hilo, which distance you make over a solid lava rock road on a sore-backing horse. All the native horses for hire have sore backs. I believe that it is the only way they can get them to go, but it makes it very interesting for the rider on that rock road with his horse on a dead trot. At every foothill he is forcibly reminded of a plover.

SPRING

Is the season in which bad or poisoned blood is most apt to show itself. Nature, at this juncture, needs something to assist it in throwing off the impurities which have collected by the sluggish circulation of blood during the cold winter months. Swift's Specific is nature's great helper, as it is a purely vegetable alterative and tonic.

Rev. L. B. Paine, Macon, Ga., writes: "We have been using Swift's Specific at the orphan's home as a remedy for blood impurities, and as a general health tonic, and have had remarkable results from its use on the children and employees of the institution. It is such an excellent tonic, and keeps the blood so pure, that the system is less liable to disease. It has cured some of our children of scrofula."

W. H. Gilbert, Druggist, Albany, Ga., writes: "We are selling large quantities of Swift's Specific for a spring alterative and general health tonic, and with the best results. It is now largely used as a preventive and cure for Malaria. There are many remarkable evidences of its merit in this section."

The beggars, numerous class, sleep in the streets nearly all the year round, congregate in the very centers of pollution, and even to some extent contest with dogs priority of claim to the refuse of the dunghill. Still they survive and flourish, and most of them—at least the strictly professional ones—look fat and sleek. * * * The entire sewage of the city is transported during the day through the most crowded and narrow thoroughfares. We are obliged to pass certain localities at all times with closed nostrils, while hundreds of people continue to live in and above those open cesspools and yet manage to look well and healthy. * * * Language fails to describe accurately the horror (from over-crowding, filth, etc.) of a Chinese prison. Suffice it to say that there is in it about one-fifth the mortality.—[Reports of the Chinese Customs.]
