THE WATER QUESTION.

Wednesday we published an official report made upon the scheme to bring water for the domestic supply of this city from the Blue Lakes. It relates, however, wholly to the question of the purity of the source of supply and the means of preserving it pure en route. It does not touch the question at all of the cost of the supply, nor the policy of buying water from a private company for an annual spot sum. These are to be vital questions in the matter.

The RECORD-UNION is committed to no water scheme, but it does wish to see clear, pure water introduced, believing, however good and harmless the present river supply, that the practical effect of clear and pure water will be of great material benefit to this city.

It may be laid down as axiomatic that it is always bad for a city to let the ownership of its water supply pass out of its hands. When it does so, there are very likely to arise issues that enter into municipal politics. However good, safe and complete a contract may be made with a water company now, it is simply impossible to bind the contracting parties that future administrations may not be set up to modify, enlarge, or wholly change the terms. There never yet was a water company supplying a city that was not a factor in the politics of the city. But all these considerations may be outweighed by demonstrated and counterbalancing benefits. Fortunately for Sacramento she has a system of water works which she need not abandon, and that can always be used as a reserve force to keep a contracting company to terms.

There is another consideration that is being debated, and will not be ignored, and that is the purity of any water supply brought in ditches. The committee report that the proposed scheme would deteriorate and be prejudicial to the users unless taken from the main canal leading from the lakes. This canal, we are told, runs mainly through hard, rocky soil, in many places through rock cuts and over cobble, traverses a sparsely settled country, and may easily be protected from surface drainage. Unfortunately the committee does not give any clear idea of the length of the canal, but it is sufficient to know that they oppose all small ditches, and decide that the supply should be drawn from the main canal—in which the water is of the best quality—and conveyed to the city in pipes, and from above any reservoirs. It would appear as if this part of the report was a practical rejection of the proposed scheme, for, as we understand it, it is extremely doubtful if the company will agree to such a length of pipe line, and without decreasing the fall by reservoirs. The water is reported as coming from the most desirable source—pure, clear, cold, and in quantity, subject to the action of frosts, and in every way good.

This places the subject therefore before the people in an intelligible light, and now will come the financial propositions and the proposal of terms of agreement. These must be considered coolly, without any heat, and with the economic question kept constantly in view. This is not a matter for any partisanship whatever. The city is in the situation of a buyer selecting goods. She can pick and choose, and is not driven to purchase. But this one consideration should never be lost sight of—the great desirability and the immeasurable benefits of clear, pure, cold water in ample supply for present uses and all possible future demands. It is a thing everybody wants, the benefits are almost countless and outweigh many other considerations.

But while the mountain supply is being considered, the City Trustees are wisely experimenting with artesian wells. It is known that all the upland region easterly and southerly of the city yields good water in wells of depths varying from 25 to 200 feet, and that are absolutely invincible to surface influences. These groups of wells are now supplying more water to private owners than this city uses, and they have been doing so a long time, and without apparent diminution. Two experimental wells are being sunk within the city, and good water may be found, but the preference always will be for wells upon the dry uplands. We saw one last week on land well above the bottoms and over two miles back from the river, which, though but 40 feet in depth, keeps its supply at a level but five feet below the surface of the land.

The whole question of the well supply should be exhausted and thoroughly tested before any conclusion as to a change of systems is arrived at. In fact, any and all propositions and schemes should be investigated, and so presented to the people that there can be no public misapprehension upon any phase of the water question. The people are sitting now as a jury, and are competent to pass upon the facts that may be presented. They are not committed to any system, and the public mind is in an admirable condition to adjudicate the water question dispassionately.

SOMETHING ABOUT NUMISMATICS.

Not nearly so much general attention is given to numismatics now as a few years ago. About the time of the outbreak of the rebellion "coin collecting" was a craze, and rare varieties were eagerly sought and highly prized. Numerous numismatic journals appeared, and coin catalogues were more numerous still. Though the craze had its day, the genuine collectors have not flagged in their enthusiasm in this branch of historic research. The coin collections of the world have steadily increased in number, and the more notable ones of the first half of the century have been augmented, and are enhancing greatly in value. At this time there is a decided revival on the subject. Newspapers are frequently applied to for information as to coin values and the address of buying collectors. There is not what can be termed a regular market for old coins. They bring prices measured by the special and immediate desire of those who wish to complete their cabinets. While the demand for an article and the supply create the market price usually, it is not altogether true in the case of rare coins.

In Boston, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and San Francisco there are regular dealers, who buy, not as collectors, but as speculators. These never pay such prices as collectors accord, for the latter are never speculators. Usually they are men and women of means, willing to spend money to gratify the taste for the possession of rare and curious coins and medals, because of the antiquity and historic interest that attaches to many of them. The real values, let us say, in answer to the question of the purity of the source of supply and the means of preserving it pure en route. It does not touch the question at all of the cost of the supply, nor the policy of buying water from a private company for an annual spot sum. These are to be vital questions in the matter.

CALIFORNIA.

Meeting of the Grant Monument State General Committee.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 11th.—The Grant Monument State General Committee met this afternoon. Senator Stanford presided. A large amount of capital was represented. Senator Stanford said he had no doubt $500,000 could be raised in California just as easily. Turrill, of Louisville, Ky., in which the latter says: "Let our raisin-makers now take active steps to place their goods on the market. With the danger of importing cholera through the agency of foreign raisins, an opportunity is offered for California producers and merchants to unite and build up a reputation and a market for their products, which will so establish them as to make it almost impossible for the foreign product to regain its vantage ground, providing, of course, that the quality is always maintained. Now is the time to strike the blow."

The gas company offered to furnish gas lamps at the rate of $275 each per month, or at the end of six months, if the electric light was preferred, to furnish light as at present furnished by the Electric Light Company for $180 per year. The Electric Light Company's bid was $12,000 per year. To-night a petition, signed by 1,000 citizens, was presented to the Council favoring the Electric Light Company's bid. Representatives of the rival companies were present at the meeting, and engaged in a discussion of the merits of the bids. The meeting was marked by a personal character were freely indulged in. An Unfortunate Mistake.

WALLA WALLA, September 11th.—Thursday night Frederick E. Lux, a farmer, came in and gave his name to the Sheriff, stating that he had shot a man on his place four miles from the city. He said he had been in town all day, but on going to find his horse he had hit him up, he found it gone. He walked home, and when at his place found his horse tied up to the fence and a man sleeping near. He woke him, and asked him if it was his horse, and if he wanted to sell it. The man said it was his horse and he would not sell it. Lux then charged him with stealing the animal, and the man set dogs on Lux, who shot at and killed one. The man then picked up a singlebar lying near and advanced toward Lux, who shot him, when he fell. Lux obtained a lantern, examined the man, and came to town to report and get a doctor. He returned with the Sheriff and a doctor, who found the man to be James Dobson, an old settler here. He had been drinking during the day and took the horse by mistake for his own, which it resembled. The bullet-hole was found three inches above the navel, the ball severing a large artery. He was then dead. The jury was impaneled under Coroner Dr. Keyler. The verdict was that he had no reason to believe death from a pistol-shot in the hands of Fred E. Lux.
