

THE BANANA MARKET.

THEIR SHIPMENT BY THE STEAMER LOAD.

When and How They are Grown and Gathered--Pleasures and Perils in the Work.

A steamer unloading 10,000 bunches of bananas. A stevedore mounted on the deck, giving out orders to 100 longshoremen, who stand in lines and pass the bunches of fruit from the hold of the vessel to waiting trucks.

"Two million bunches of bananas come into this port alone every year," said the importer. "Previous to 1884 there were not near so many. Schooners were employed, and they took six weeks to make a trip, carrying only 2,500 bunches and lost a quarter of them on account of the length of time afloat and the damage by salt water.

"Where do the bananas come from?" "Well, the reds, which appear to be the favorites, come from Baracoa, Cuba. We get from 30,000 to 40,000 bunches of them a week during August, but less now that peaches are in market.

"How do bananas grow?" "On immense plantations, laid off into rows of trees about eight feet apart each way. The trunk of a banana tree is composed of the stems of leaves and grows from fifteen to twenty feet high.

"On immense plantations, laid off into rows of trees about eight feet apart each way. The trunk of a banana tree is composed of the stems of leaves and grows from fifteen to twenty feet high. When the fruiting begins, a bud appears at the top of the stem and develops into a bunch of bananas. When the fruit is gathered the tree is cut down and left to decay, and new sprouts appear from the root, and thus the crop is continually repeated.

"In the hold of the vessel the bananas are placed in bins holding several hundred bunches each, and arranged to admit all the air possible. The ventilation is so important that large crates, called 'wind-sails' are fixed on deck so as to catch the wind and carry it down into the hold. In winter much care is necessary to prevent the cargo from freezing on the voyage. Bananas are almost entirely fruit that is always in season. They arrive at this port every month in the year. During the poorest months in midwinter we receive 70,000 bunches, and in summer the number frequently reaches 350,000 bunches."--New York Mail and Express.

DESTROYING INSECTS.

Remedies for the Various Pests that Infest Gardens and Their Use.

Land plaster dusted on plants when the dew is on will destroy some plant insects, and will benefit the plant in most instances and do harm to none.

Two gallons kerosene oil, half pound common or whale oil soap and a gallon of hot water, well mixed and churned or stirred through a strainer. This makes three gallons of emulsion--mix this with twenty-seven gallons of water and it will be ready for spraying plants or fruit trees.

To meet the increasing depredations of insects upon vegetable life the best results have been obtained by the use of three articles, viz: arsenic, petroleum and pyrethrum.

The first, in the form of Paris green, or London purple, acts as a direct poison to leaf-eating insects, which eat vegetable tissue. The arsenical properties are of little value to destroy juice-sucking insects.

The second and third named articles, though less efficient than arsenic, have the best results in the destruction of juice-sucking insects which do not bite into the leaf but puncture into the cuticle. An external application of poison does not reach these pests, so we are forced to suffocate them, or injure them by corrosive action.

In the powder, Paris green may be mixed with two hundred parts of plaster starch or flour, and in solution one pound to two hundred gallons of water. Kerosene is often effectively applied mixed with two parts of milk. Another good application is, kerosene eight parts, hot soap one part, water eight parts--the two latter heated to the boiling point, and the kerosene added when the emulsion is removed away from fire. To this add twenty parts of water and apply with a fine syringe.

Pyrethrum is a preparation of the flower heads of a well-known plant. It may be applied as a powder or in solution.

Some horticulturists put dry, pulverized cow dung between the rows of cabbage plants and work it into the soil while cultivating the plants. They say cabbage flies cannot stand the odor of cow dung.

What Horticulturist Says about the cabbage fly: "Some seasons the fly (a small black beetle) destroys cabbage plants as fast as they appear above the ground. Soots, air-slacked lime and wood ashes sprinkled over them, is, in part, a preventive. Others destroy them by having a hen cooped near the plant bed, allowing the young chickens to run among the plants and destroy the flies. I invariably grow my cabbages in boxes, elevated eighteen inches above the ground, entirely out of the reach of the insect, which does not appear on elevated objects. This operation requires more attention in watering, but a certainty is always gained by it."

What Homes, in his Southern Farmer and Gardener, has to say about it: "Homes recommends that a barrel be filled one-third full of China berries (Pride of China) and then filled full of water and let them
