LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.
A PRACTICAL JOKER.
 Judge Buckley Holds Him to Answer on a Serious Charge.
 In the Police Court yesterday morning John Roland was called to answer to a charge of burglary. From the evidence brought out in the examination it appears that Roland was quite friendly with Hans Nielsen, who lives on the east side of Tenth street, between J and K.
 On Sunday evening Roland called to see Hans at the latter's room. Not finding his friend in the room proceeded to break into the room, taking a pair of blacksmith tongs and withdrawing a couple of dollars which he spread a couple of pair of boots on the floor, and bundled into two overcoats, a couple of suits of clothing, a razor and soap, a bunch of keys, a wall clock, and in fact everything of a movable nature that he could lay his hands upon. He carefully wrapped the bundle in a blanket, and with ropes, and walked deliberately out from the door and to his room in a hotel some three blocks distant.
 When Nielsen returned in the evening he missed his wardrobe and also a couple of notes for $100 each. He was considerably excited, and when a friend told him that Roland had been seen around there and also going down street with a big bundle, Nielsen at once notified the police, who informed the officers, and the next day he was in jail and all the plunder found in his room.
 In the Court yesterday he said it was all intended for a joke. He intended to return the things to Nielsen after the latter had been annoyed sufficiently, so as to have some sport with him. He could not account, however, for one of the stolen vests being packed away among his own clothes in his trunk. When asked about that, he replied that "it must have got there by mistake."
 Judge Buckley evidently did not see the point to the joke, as he held Roland to answer to the Superior Court with bail fixed at $2,000.
 The charge of grand larceny against J. F. Johnson was dismissed, the Court being satisfied that there was not sufficient grounds to convict. Charles Field, a hokey-poker dealer, was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon and vagrancy.
The River and Weather.
 The river yesterday stood at the 24 foot 4 inch mark, a fall of one inch in the twenty-four hours. So far as can be ascertained the levees above and below the city, and on the islands, are all intact, and no damage is apprehended. All of the storm water will be down in a couple of days, and then the river will fall rapidly.
 The highest and lowest Signal Service temperature yesterday was 65° and 59°, with gentle and variable winds, but no rain above 30 inches and rising. The rainfall yesterday amounted to .01 of an inch, making 6.25 for this month, 6.73 inches for the year and 16.19 inches for the old country. It gives all I got, everything in the world, to get out of here.
 A Bismarck, which suggested Nora of Suto, half-penitently and half-joyfully.
 "Tam Bismarck," yelled the Dutchman, as the car gave another lurch.
 "On we went, a blaze of fire and smoke, when I thought I noticed the mule smoking up the chimney, and we were going like a burning mass, and we were going like a burning mass. Not a word was said about the mule, but the driver, who was startled by the voice of the driver, as the car gave another lurch, who exclaimed in a voice that seemed miles away, "We are switched off onto a side-track, and a mule further on there is an open shaft 800 feet deep."
 "Good heavens! here we were going like a burning mass in the darkness, on, on, like the wind driven by a mad wind, and could not jump out. There was not six inches of space on each side of the car, and a hissing steam engine was puffing in front. The Jew cursed; the Dutchman prayed as he never prayed before. Then I thought I detected something like a smothered laugh from the dark-eyed Dutchman, and in raising my head towards the sound came from that, what should I see but a broad, and we suddenly flashed into broad daylight at the mouth of the tunnel, and the driver, who was shouting a broad grin on his face, as he exclaimed:
 "Well, boys, you have had the fastest ride in the history of this or any other tunnel. We have been in the air for five minutes—coming out. Six miles in fifteen minutes—how is that for fast time?"
The Salvation Army.
 The Salvation Army in this city does not appear to grow in numbers; in fact, there seems to be fewer in the ranks than there were two years ago. However, the smallness of its size does not seem to dampen any of its ardor, and five or six, with a bass drum, a cornet, two tambourines and good tunes, came to the city on the morning of the afternoon of the Fourth of July. Grass Valley and Woodland have also been two of their objects of late, and they are now on their way to Placerville. A gentleman down from Placerville yesterday, in conversation with an old El Dorado man, said that he had seen the Salvation Army in an English magazine, General Booth's Commandant, says that it now consists of 2,300 corps in thirty-one different countries, and under the leadership of 1,100 officers, who were devoted to the work. The present revenue of the Army, drawn "mainly from the streets and the utility of the street," is $37,000. In England alone it pays rent aggregating more than $500,000, and sends in the United Kingdom, upward of 100,000 persons every Sunday. This remarkable growth has occurred almost wholly during the last ten years.

A FRIGHTFUL BLAZE.
 Whizzing Through Futro Tunnel Behind a Wild Blazing Mule.
 Dropping into an up-town hotel yesterday, three or four old-timers were found who were "heaving the hatchet" in a rather reckless, alarming manner. The question of fast time made by horses now-days was casually mentioned, when one of the boys of '49 tilted his chair back and said:
 "Talk about fast time, what do you think of a mule making six miles in fifteen minutes in a car, and having six passengers and a driver?"
 The rest of the boys eyed him in a doubtful and suspicious manner, but one of them seemed disposed to tell him what he thought, viz: That he was telling an Anglo-Saxon fabrication.
 "I was one of the passengers," I'll tell you how it was. Last summer I thought I would take a scout through Nevada, and to do so I dropped in on an old friend, Charley Bernard, down in Suto. Well, he got to blowing about the great Suto tunnel, and nothing would do but I would go through it. So after a suiter or two at an adjoining livery restaurant, he took me out to the mouth of the tunnel and into the Superintendent's office, where we put on our waterproofs and prepared to board the Superintendent's car. The car was crowded by four passengers. On the left sat a gentleman of undoubted Jewish descent, from San Francisco, while opposite to him sat a prim schoolmarm, religious-looking lady from Virginia City; next to her sat a jolly-looking black-eyed girl, who seemed in for fun, opposite to her a Dutchman, fresh from the fatherland; in front sat the driver and Bernard, while I sat in the rear seat.
 "We were all waiting and waiting for the boy to hitch up the mule, but no mule appeared. After half an hour's wait he at last showed up, being led by a red-headed boy, who had had a 'damned old time,' as he said, in 'catchin' that blamed mule.' We need not blame me, mister, he said, when he hitched up the mule, for he had there told me to oil Jerry and turn him out, and I did." By the look of Jerry, there was no doubt but that he had oil him, and instead of rubbing a few drops of coal oil over his many hide, the lad had literally rubbed a couple of gallons of it on him.
 "The driver produced two torches, and hung them one on each side of Jerry's collar and one went into that window and began to figure what was appropriate. He spread a couple of pair of boots on the floor, and bundled into two overcoats, a couple of suits of clothing, a razor and soap, a bunch of keys, a wall clock, and in fact everything of a movable nature that he could lay his hands upon. He carefully wrapped the bundle in a blanket, and with ropes, and walked deliberately out from the door and to his room in a hotel some three blocks distant.

AN ACTOR'S LIFE.
 The Story of Sol Smith Russell's Life.
 Sol Smith Russell, the intangible comedian, whose droll manner and semi-serious mirth is indescribable, kept his audience in a roar of laughter last evening in "Be-witched." But the piece is unworthy of him, below even the least of his efforts, and ought to be stricken from his repertoire. Compared with "Pa," or "A Poor Relation," it is simply a cipher. It is not surprising that the author felt called upon to apologize for this weak imitation of a central idea in Austey's "Vice Versa." It was laughable, but only in its cause of Mr. Russell, who would have quite as much entertained his audience in his old-time monologues, which recall the fact to memory that Russell first appeared here, we believe, in monologues and character acts with the "Sergeant" concert troupe—at least, as far as traveled as that troupe, and his amiable and much esteemed wife was formerly one of the Berger sisters. A gentleman present in position at the State Capitol, was Sol Smith Russell's schoolmaster for a time, and speaks of him with great interest. The comedian was born in Brunswick, Missouri, in 1848. The family removed to St. Louis, and from there to Jacksonville, Ill. The entire family were in the usual seriousness of thought and habit; in that respect being peculiarly noted—all except Sol, he was the one ready and unobtainable member. He seemed to be born with a longing for the stage, and was plain to be seen, the father and concert troupe on every possible occasion. He ran away from home and went to St. Louis, and sang with a minstrel troupe, but returned at such solicitation of his father, and attempted to stick to school; but it was useless, he couldn't do it; the teachers were irresistible in their attraction for him. But his old master bears witness that though he could not be tied to books or business, he was always discreet in habit, upright, clean in life, straightforward and choice in his associations. Off of the stage, while relishing wit and indulging in humor as it flew, he is really a serious man, the cast of the family trait of unusual seriousness being clearly distinguishable in him. It is the fact that behind and shining through this family characteristic that makes him what he is, the drollest of comedians. His elder brother is a successful practicing lawyer, and the world is better off for it. A serious man to severity. His younger brother is a very successful practicing lawyer, and the world is better off for it. "Sol" had earned enough to send this brother to college and see him safely through his course, to the great delight of the family, whose one black sheep" proved, after all, their pride and comfort. For Russell's life has honored the stage and done credit to manliness. Not without there may be of superstition in it, and whether there is any relation of the one fact to the other, it is true that the comedy of shoot from the most serious of families of the West was named after an uncle of his by marriage, who had been an actor and an author, and a straight-forward and choice in his associations.
