

A EUROPEAN CENSUS.

The German year book gives the figures of even the income tax. An income tax of $250 or less is not taxed, and up to $750 the tax is nominal. For incomes over $750 the owner must swear as to the truth of the figures he gives. The exact rental of each dwelling is obtained, and the average rentals for different conditions are published. The showing for the year 1888 makes the average rental for a single room without a stove—or an "unheatable" room as the expression used—is a sum that corresponds in our money to $30 per year. It makes the rental for a single room with a stove in it—or a single "heatable" room—$50; for living apartments, consisting of two "heatable" rooms, $85 per annum; for apartments, consisting of three such rooms, $150; for four "heatable" rooms, $200, etc.

The figures throwing light upon the amount of reading done by different classes of citizens is very detailed. In Berlin there is a system of popular ward libraries, of which there are twenty-five altogether. These are owned and managed by the city. The demand upon these libraries during a single season is sought to be shown more usefully by a classification of the readers. Twelve hundred officials of the city civil service are reported to have taken out altogether 30,000 volumes, or twenty-five apiece. Nine hundred and eleven teachers are stated to have taken out in the same period of time, 25,000 books; 3,000 pupils of the schools, 60,000 volumes; 2,000 business men, 40,000 volumes; 3,000 artisans, 60,000 volumes; 865 workmen of the lower class, 18,000 volumes; 125 soldiers, 900 volumes, and 3,700 women, 52,000 volumes. The official library of the Mayor of Berlin had recently 30,000 volumes; the library of the Statistical Bureau had at the same time 5,000 books; the Royal Library 1,000,000 books, of which 200,000 were taken out in the year; the University Library loaned in the same time 45,000 books; the library of the Geological School, 35,000; that of the Patent Office, 30,000; that of the Imperial Statistics Bureau, 30,000; that of the Prussian Statistics Bureau, 113,000.

MARRIAGE STATISTICS. The figures given in regard to marriage are interesting. In Germany a compulsory civil marriage law is in force. The only question before the parties to a marriage in Berlin is whether, after the civil marriage, they shall seek the blessing of the pastor. The year 1888 shows that in 1888 8 per cent. more married couples sought this blessing than in the preceding year; 61 per cent. of all those married couples, not classed as Catholics, were married a second time with a religious service. During the year 1888 87 per cent. of the children in the whole population are shown to have been baptized. The ordinary church statistics, curiously, appeared as follows: Churches in Berlin, 45; chapels (chiefly meeting places of sects), 21; total church seating capacity, 50,000; clergymen, 127. The population of the city is about 1,100,000. There is a special report of accessions and desertions of the evangelical body in Berlin. In 1887 285 persons were converted to Evangelicalism and 114 persons left the body. Six of these latter modernly from Judaism, and 108 to other religious denominations.

PERSONAL LIBERTY IN BERLIN. The police methods in Berlin greatly aid in the preparation of a very full census. No room can be rented at a hotel or boarding house, and no apartment or house can be legally leased until the landlord has sent to the police the name and purpose of the newcomer and the length of time for which he will probably remain in the city home. The same method is in vogue in other German cities. The experience of one of the Professors of the University of Pennsylvania last summer is significant as to the effectiveness of these methods. Wishing to communicate with an American lady who was abroad, and in a very thoughtless, in Leipzig, he wrote to the police of that city. The answer declared that no person of the name was in the city. A similar letter was sent to the police headquarters of Dresden, and a similar answer was received. When, later, however, the Professor wrote to the police of Berlin, the reply announced that Mrs. was living at No. street, on the floor.

All About Cherries. To make cherry jelly, wash and stone the cherries and heat, without the addition of water, in a stone jar or porcelain kettle. They should be cooked in a very little water, or, better, in a stone jar set upon a few sticks or a false bottom in a larger kettle of cold water and boiled till they will easily mash. Squeeze through a flannel jelly-bag, boil the juice twenty minutes in a porcelain granulated kettle, add sugar and pound of sugar for every pint of juice, heat in the oven, and boil up again, then into jelly tumblers that have been made scalding hot. To make cherry preserves, stone the cherries, reserve every drop of juice. Weigh the fruit, allowing pound for pound of sugar. Put a layer of fruit for one of sugar until all is used up; pour over the juice and boil gently until the syrup becomes thick. The short-stemmed red cherries or the morellos are best for preserves. To make cherry pickles, take large cherries before they are ripe enough to be soft, and put them, stems on, into jars of stone or glass. Heat the jars in hot water, and pour over them a syrup made with a pint of vinegar to every three pounds of sugar. Tie in a bag tea-spoonfuls of each of cinnamon, allspice and cloves. Drain off the liquid and heat to boil every morning for a week. Pour it, white hot, over the cherries, which must be kept in a cool, dark cellar, or sealed in cans. Blackberries may be pickled in the same manner. One pound of sugar ought to cover nearly a gallon of fruit. For a sourer pickle use half as much sugar.
