CALIFORNIA IN THE COLUMBIAN FAIR.

The details of the selection of the site of the Columbian or World's Fair at Chicago having been fairly well settled, it is now time to review the discussion of the part California should have in that Exposition.

As the Legislature is about to assemble, and the subject will be presented to it, the debate from this date until the meeting of the Houses should be general and thorough, that less valuable time may be consumed in the session in its consideration, and the wiser course of action be resolved upon in the public mind as a guide to the Legislature.

When the fair was resolved upon, the RECORD-UNION expressed itself emphatically in favor of California having a separate exhibition in it. Nothing has transpired since then, nor have any reasons been advanced to work any change in the convictions of this journal concerning that matter.

California must exhibit and must do her full share in adding to the volume and worth of the nation's Exposition, but while national pride should stimulate her, State pride and interest will be the chief underlying motives of our activity. If we conserve in the highest degree our own interest, we will give the nation more reason to be proud of the showing we make.

Already the department policy has been resolved upon by the Managing Commission of the fair—that is, the general exhibition is to be one of States and Territories so much as it is of classes of products and manufactures.

But this by no means precludes the idea of a distinct cumulative State exhibition within the grounds, or within the buildings of the Exposition.

Now it must be obvious to even the commonest understanding that California's part in the departmental exhibition would be comparatively insignificant.

By reason of the youth of the State, and its industries and arts, it will be simply impossible for us to exhibit in the departments alone, and receive the recognition that will compensate for the output of our energy and money.

In the first place, there will be a great many departments in which we cannot make displays. These will represent industries and products that do not yet engage our attention.

In the second place, such exhibits as we would make in the departments would be lost in the mass and in the overwhelming numerical superiority of the exhibits of our sister States.

joining and family reunions, any intelligent act recognizing the day and its purpose, is one of thanksgiving.

That by custom and by law we set apart one day in the year for these purposes, is not a mere act of formality. On the contrary, the custom and the law are outgrowths of human sympathy, of recognition of man's dependence, of his acknowledgment of the stewardship of the most precious character.

The national heart is in sympathy with the day; the spirit that inspires its ceremonies and observances is one that brims over with kindness and charity and good will towards men.

All such manifestations as the setting apart of one day from business and worry and toil for the special purpose of expressing thankfulness for that we have and have enjoyed, operate directly upon people in the direction of beneficence.

They quicken the sensibilities, they soften the heart, they enlarge the sympathies, they bring our fellows closer to us, they expand the mantle of charity, and they incline us to more kindly regard the frailties and errors of our fellow men.

While, therefore, we feel thankful for our lot, for the passage of the year without famine, pestilence or calamity, let us open our hearts to our fellow men, and with more of mercy for the erring, forgiveness for those who have offended against us, penitence for our misdeeds and forgetfulness of the wrongs under which we have suffered, give thanks for human brotherhood, for national greatness, for State prosperity, for community peace and well-being, for the friendships that are ours, the affection that binds us to those of kin and home, and the love that compensates for all toil and self-sacrifice.

CENSUS TAKING.

All the clamor for a retaking of the census is unworthy. It is probable that many people were missed by the enumerators, but we apprehend that such would be the result, no matter what season of the year should be set apart for enumeration.

One demand made is that a new census shall be ordered by Congress to be taken in June. But at that season on this coast, as was proved last June, the exodus from the cities begins; at the East the tourists are off for Europe and South America at that time, and in the South the drift towards the North begins.

If any autumn month is chosen there would still be found many absentees at the East. In the winter and early spring people would be more likely to be found at their homes, but the inclement seasons are not conducive to activity and thoroughness on the part of the enumerators.

It is now evident that the census was fairly well taken, probably quite as well as any corps of enumerators would do it at any time under the system adopted. What is needed is a radically different method. It ought to be a matter of no supreme difficulty to make enumeration of all the people of the United States in a single day, or at the outside in forty-eight hours; that is, of course, leaving the matter of gathering statistics for such greater length of time as may be needed.

The experience of countries of Europe prove that it is possible to accurately enumerate some millions of people within a few hours. The short-time method, of course, includes the taking of names, ages, sex, residence, etc., of all people wherever found, and within such small sub-divisions of territory, as to remove the liability of omission to the greatest distance.

At any rate, there is no reason whatever for putting the nation to the enormous expense of a second enumeration for the census of 1890. The gain in numbers reported would not probably be sufficient to make any material difference in apportionment, and there can be no assurance given that there will be any better results with a new corps of enumerators.

The Chicago Journal thinks Mr. Cleveland is unfair to assume that the sentiment of the Republican party is opposed to cheapness. The Journal is right, the Republican party sentiment favors the economic, and pronounces for fair wages and cheapness of the necessary things of life.

That some speakers of the party have given utterance to thoughts that may be construed as denouncing "cheapness" as un-American, does not prove that such is the sentiment of the party. On the contrary, it wants to sell to the best advantage and buy to the best advantage, that and pure and simple, is accomplished best through reciprocity.
