SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The disposition of political parties of any considerable age to submit to the domination of class interests and to become subservient to the venal ends of influences that serve self-seeking only, is the weakness of the party system of the Republic.

When slavery was supreme in the United States both the Whig and the Democratic parties sought the condition of subserviency to it. It rejected the overtures of the Whig party, and accepted the subject variety of the Democratic party.

Slavery was the greatest corporation, in fact, that ever menaced government on this continent. It became a corporation by reason of the alliance of all slave-holders in all the slave-holding States; the complete control of the life of the slave-holding States by the slave-owning classes, and the control of the electoral vote and delegations in Congress from the slave States by slave interests. This powerful combination had to be broken down and destroyed by the creation of a new party and the exigence brought forth the agency.

A question that now confronts the people of the United States is whether the Republican party, being dominant, is repeating history in a slightly varied form. Has it become measurably the party of monopolists, of trusts and of rings, and the creature of the whim of ring-masters? Is it becoming, or is it already, a class party? Such inquiry unquestionably occupies the public mind, which in many quarters is responding affirmatively to these questions.

Something of this is confessed by so stalwart a champion of that party as the New York Tribune, when, in discussing the McKinley bill and its relation to the recent rebuke at the polls, it rather timidly asks:

But was the greed of individuals or corporations unable to shape any clause of the Act? If one or two trusts which still survive had been forced out of existence by the bill, the measure might have commanded more support at the outset than it did. Again, if among thousands of worthy public servants some individuals in posts of trust had failed to do their whole duty to the people whose servants they are, some fraction of the reverse may be owing to these delinquencies also. In several States, moreover, there was a Republican management which did not satisfy the sincerest voters. It is now a duty of all who are charged with responsibility to say whether such management shall be sustained and prolonged. In a word, it is a proper time for the very best thought and the conscience of the country to be heard and heeded.

It is not difficult to read between the lines of this hesitating criticism the conviction of that journal that there is a menace to the party which must needs be heeded. It is mistaken, however, when it infers that the rebuke was not directly aimed at, and intended for the controlling party, and half confession of this truth is found in this further quotation from the same journal:

The lesson given to their rulers by the voters of this country can be interpreted, by anybody who pleases, to mean the man in the next pew. But he will be hapless in the long run who asks his own conscience all sincerity. "How much of that belongs to me?" is the question which every citizen should ask himself. How far they have been governed by their sense of right, and how far swayed by their passions, is the question which every citizen should ask himself. How far they have been governed by their sense of right, and how far swayed by their passions, is the question which every citizen should ask himself.

The truth is, that the subservient disposition to which we referred in the outset is so pronounced that it must challenge the concern of every citizen who esteems country superior to party power and triumph.

If we pass dangerous centralizing tendencies, and party counseling that takes rings, trusts and moneyed power into communion with it rather than the highest interests of the people, we discover in the emphatic and repeated demands for change in the methods of choosing United States Senators, the expression of augmenting public conviction that the Senate of the United States is dangerously filling up with millionaires, and gaining by justice the title of "the rich man's club." The time since this, the most important and potent of all deliberative bodies, has taken on something of aristocratic character, is not long, and it portends a time not longer in the future when, if the drift continues, the title of Senator will be claimed as the equivalent in rank and demand of that of Earl or Marquis in monarchies.

It is charged that there are about a score of men in the Senate whose wealth exceeds a million dollars each, and the major portion of whom are more conspicuous for their income than for the statesmanlike qualities which should equip the citizen for so high a trust.

It is not to be understood that there is of necessity incompatibility between the possession of great wealth and the possession of high intellectual qualities, nor that an aggregation of wealth in the hands of man necessarily disqualifies him for the possession and exercise of statesmanlike abilities. Where these conditions combine in the individual actuated by high motives and patriotic purposes, the nation may be served to even greater advantage.

There is no offense in wealth honestly acquired and wisely administered. It is a conservator, under such conditions, of industry and the best interests of the country and its people. But when it accomplishes self-seeking by political control, the antagonism of the people is inevitable, and their conviction of its misuse will culminate in revolts before which parties of subserviency to rings, trusts and speculative combinations must go down.

It has passed into a proverbial saying that many men sit in halls of legislation and dictate in party councils, who, were they poor, would not be chosen to keep the outer doors. It is common notoriety that Congressmen, upon the liberal salaries they receive, often do not live within their incomes, and we have instances of open assertion of the fact, coupled with resignations for that reason. It surprises no thoughtful man, therefore, that there is gathering a stern demand which will not be denied, for a return to such democratic simplicity as will leave legislators free and independent men, and in the broadest and best sense representative of the American people.

In the face of the facts of the time, of venality and corruption, of bargain and sale of place and dominance; of rings, trusts, monopolies of land and opportunity; of moneyed power; of unscrupulous wealth and conscienceless commercial interests, it behooves the patriotic citizens of the United States to consider profoundly what such influences may bring the nation.

When combinations of manufacturers and mere party politicians; of close trusts and wealth-congested legislators; of political rings and debt-ridden representatives control the body of the legislation of any nation, and fashion the foreign and domestic policy of any one people, there exist conditions that imperil national integrity and the perpetuity of safe government.

It has been too long the habit to close the eyes to the drift towards political usurpation by interests not conservative of the weal of the people; to content ourselves with the present and trust the future to the future; to consider party triumph as the chief of goals and as determining the policy for the nation; to submit to the convenient but illusive doctrine that national destiny is fashioned by party conventions and worked out by the mere declaration of sounding platforms.

But, unless we wholly mistake the reading of the times and the lessons of history, the time is at hand, and the protests that are coming up from all parts of the country announce it, when the old parties must be brought up out of the mire of personal control and subserviency or give way before the on-pushing of resistless influences that have their source and spring in the conscience of the great body of the people. There are, in short, evils menacing the national life to-day that call for heroic words to strike them down, and since the American Republic has not achieved its destiny, we may feel assured that the weaponry will be forthcoming.

It is possible for the old political parties to rise up and free themselves from the slavish chains with which self-seeking interests have bound them, and to write for themselves a new declaration of independence. It may be well doubted, however, if they will undertake the task until popular revolt has achieved greater momentum and the protesting people have peremptorily turned their shoulders upon the bandwagons with which political interests are seeking to beguile them.

THE RIVER COMMISSION.

It will meet here in January and Commence its Work.

A special dispatch to the RECORD-UNION from Washington last evening contained the following list of interesting news for people in the Sacramento valley:

WASHINGTON, December 13th--Your correspondent today asked Colonel Merrill what the Sacramento River Commission would get to work on first, and he said:

"You may say that we will meet in Sacramento on January 15th. Congressmen Clegg, General Casey and myself had a talk about it this morning, and we decided to assemble in town meetings for that purpose."

DOLAN'S LATEST.

Ho Marries His Victim, and is Now Under Arrest for Perjury.

About two weeks since Frank Dolan, a notorious character here, suddenly left the city, taking with him a young girl named Katie Sheridan, whose home is on Fifth street. He caused the impression to get abroad that he was going to Seattle, and the police department sent notices out in all directions asking for the arrest of the pair.

According to the statement of the girl's father, she is but 16 years of age, and he wished to procure her arrest in order that she might be sent to the Magdalen Asylum. Just a week ago the Record-Union published the fact that Dolan had been seen in Pineda's dive in San Francisco, and Chief Drew was also notified of that fact. He telegraphed to San Francisco, was communicated with, and last night the following letter was received from him:

SAN FRANCISCO, December 12th. W. F. Drew, Chief of Police, Sacramento: Frank Dolan has been arrested. He has married Katie Sheridan, and swore she was 18 years of age. We shall prosecute for perjury. F. CROVLY, Chief of Police.

It looks very much as if the whilom woman-beater and all-around tough had about reached the end of his rope.

Slater and the Athletics.

The Sacramento Athletic Club will give an entertainment and social for members and their lady friends exclusively, at Pythian Hall, on Monday evening. John Slater, the well known psychologist and medium, has volunteered to give the members a short session during the night. Dancing will follow the entertainment.

Two Interesting Subjects.

Rev. A. C. Bane, pastor of the Seventh-street Methodist Church, will resume his evening services on Sunday. Evening subject: "A Tour Among the Mountains of Love, on a Mission of Love." Morning subject: "Faith and Feelings." The nature of the evening subject should draw large audience.

A SCROFULOUS BOY.

Running Sores Covered His Body and Head--Bones Affected--Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

When six months old the left hand of our little grandchild began to swell, and had every appearance of a large boil. It would not heal, and all to no purpose. About five months after it became a running sore, and the hand was so swollen that he then had two of them on each hand, and as his blood became more and more impure, the sores came out on his face and neck, and he was very offensive. His head was one solid scab, and he was unable to get up if he fell down. He was so ill that he could not move when in bed, having no use of his hands. I immediately commenced with Cuticura, and in a few days he was able to get up, and after another heeled, a bony matter forming in the hands.
