Weakness, Loss of Organic Power, Pains in the Lungs, Diseases of the Kidneys, Affections of the Head, Throat, Nose and Skin, Constitutional Debility, and all those horrid affections arising from a Certain Secret Habit of Youth, that solitary practice, more to its victims than the song of the Sirens to the mariners of Ulysses—blighting their noblest hopes or anticipations, rendering marriage, etc., impossible.

A CURE WARRANTED, OR NO CHARGE.
Young Men especially, who have become the victims of Solitary Vice, that dreadful and destructive habit which annually sweeps off an untold grave thousands of young men of the most exalted talents and brilliant intellect, who might otherwise have entered the Senate with the most brilliant hopes or anticipations, rendering marriage, etc., impossible.

MARRIAGE.
Married persons, or those contemplating marriage, being aware of physicians, should immediately consult Dr. J., and be restored to perfect health.
Office, No. 7 South Federal street, Baltimore, Maryland, on the corner of the old Baltimore street, between the old door from the corner. Be particular in observing the name and number, or you will mistake the place.

DR. JOHNSTON.
Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Graduate from one of the most eminent Colleges of the United States, and the greater part of whose life has been spent in the study of medicine, and the treatment of diseases, he has effected some of the most astonishing cures that were ever known. Many troubled with ringing in the ears and deafness, or with the most obstinate and chronic rheumatism, and with derangement of mind, were cured immediately.

TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE.
Dr. J. addresses all those who have injured themselves by private and improper indulgence, that secret and solitary vice, which ruins both body and mind, uniting them for either business or society.

These are some of the sad and melancholy effects produced by early habits of youth, viz: Weakness of the Head and Lungs, Pains in the Head, Dimness of Sight, Loss of Muscular Power, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Nervous Irritability, Derangement of the Digestive Functions, General Debility, Symptoms of Consumption, and all those affections which are the result of the most insidious and dangerous disease.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.
Weakness of the system, Nervous Debility and premature decay generally arise from the destructive habit of youth, that solitary practice so fatal to the healthful existence of man, which ruins both body and mind, uniting them for either business or society.

DR. JOHNSTON'S INVIGORATING REMEDY FOR OBESITY AND ANEMIA.
This grand and important remedy restores strength and vigor to thousands of the most debilitated individuals, many who had lost all hopes, and been abandoned to the world, and who were considered incurable by the most skillful and successful physicians.

AMERICAN TELEGRAPH.

The Two School Girls.
A group of little girls were standing, one cloudy day in summer, on the green in front of their school-house. They were in earnest discussion, and long and loud were the voices, while one modest-looking child in the centre was trying in vain to wipe away the tears, that, in spite of all her efforts, would roll over her cheeks.

"Never mind, Mary," said one, "we all know you ought to have been at the head; and that you would have been, if it had not been for Margaret Nelson."

"I feel sorry I have lost my place," said Mary, "but I am not crying for that. I loved Maggie, and I thought she loved me; but I do not like to think that any one could have been so selfish and mean."

"You might have let me tell Mrs. Carter, and I know you would not have lost your place then, Mary."

"Oh, no, Kitty; I do not want to disgrace Margaret in Mrs. Carter's eyes. It is had enough that you happened to hear her, and to know it."

"I don't believe there is a single girl in our class who will speak to her after this, unless you do."

"I hope I shall try to do right about it," answered Mary.

"I'll leave her no peace," said Lucy; "for I'll talk to her every chance I can get; and I only wish I could make my voice sound as if it came from all corners of the room, like a ventriloquist, and she should hear all sorts of sounds."

"I don't believe that would do any good, Lucy. I'll not promise to say nothing about it," replied Anna; "for I do not think I can help speaking. The mean, contemptible girl!"

"Well," answered Mary, "we shall not be in season for our dinner, if we talk here much longer. We must go."

Mary and Anna turned down the road, and the other girl went in an opposite direction.

"Now, what are you going to do?" asked Anna. "You surely will not treat Margaret just as you did before, will you?"

"I ought to do it; but I cannot say that I shall. I hope I shall be able. But it is very hard not to make any difference; and, in spite of myself, my manner or my tone might show I felt injured, if by my words did not. I am sure I did not think last Sunday, when Miss Deane, my Sunday-school teacher, told us about forgiveness of injuries, that I should have to practise it so soon."

"If you do," said Anna, "you will be the first school girl that ever did. But you're a dear, good girl, Mary," added Anna, kissing her, "and we all know where your place should be, if Mrs. Carter doesn't. Good-bye." And Anna ran across the street, leaving Mary on her own door steps.

Mary stood in the large entry closet, while she was putting away her bonnet and shawl, and tried to feel kindly towards Margaret; but it was hard work, and Mrs. Coleman saw, when she raised her eyes as Mary entered the parlor, that her face was clouded.

"Well, dear," she said inquiringly, "tell me all about it. Your face tells a history, though I am not quite skilful enough to read it exactly."

"I can tell you the story, mother; but I think I had better not tell you the name of the person, except I will say that she is one of my best friends. She was next me in the class, and I always thought she did not care to get above me—at least she has often told me so. To-day there was a hard question in arithmetic, and I asked her the explanation of it in recess, because I had seen her ask Mrs. Carter just before, and knew she must have told her the right one. She gave me the explanation, and two or three of the other girls listened, and heard it too. The question came to me, and I explained it as she had told me. Mrs. Carter said it was wrong, and passed it to her, without waiting to hear what I had to say. She did it correctly, and went above me."

"I thought I must have mistaken what the girl had said, though I did not see how I could have done so; but Sarah Lee was standing by the desk when Mrs. Carter explained the sum; and she showed it afterwards to one of the girls who had heard what my friend had said. This girl was coming to tell me; but recess was over before she could find me. Sarah accused her of telling me the wrong way when school was done; and all the girls who were near said she looked very guilty, and muttered something to herself, and then hurried off as fast as possible."

"Could any child do such a mean, selfish action? I can hardly believe it."

"I tried not to believe it, mother; but it must be true. I cannot bear to think any one would do it."

"Did you tell Mrs. Carter, after school?"

"No, mamma. I did not want her to know it. The girls were going to tell her, but I begged they would not. I felt troubled about it, and grieved that any one I love should do so."

"Are you sure you are not angry, instead of grieved?"

"I think so, mamma. I was very angry at first, but I do not feel at all as I did then."

"I am sorry this should have happened; but I want you to try to do right about it. Try to treat her as if she had not injured you." Mary promised to do her best.

At school that afternoon, Margaret studiously avoided Mary, and turned her head whenever she saw her approaching. When school was over, she ran home, without waiting for any of the girls.
