FANNY.
A being of her gentle sex,
The seeming parricide—
When poets sing, their fervid lyre
Are oft of some beloved ideal:
But the fair lassie in whose praise
I breathe a rhyme, is real.
She's small in stature, but in mind
As graceful as a Fairy Queen.
And o'er her brow
As white as snow,
Fall from the sky,
A wealth of glossy ringlets roll,
While from her hazel eyes,
That fascinate the gazer, gleam
As every glance a soul.
Let other beauties of maidens gay
Who dwell in countries far away
Beneath the rising sun,
Fanny, the subject of my dream
By night, and thoughts by day,
Is lovelier, fairer far than they—
At least she's fair enough for me!
And I no greater joy than
Than, as you'd come could wish or know
You, kneeling at her shrine,
In hushed awe, in accents clear,
Her soft and silvery voice to hear
Exclaim, "I'm wholly thine!"

A Widow's Tribute to Gen. Scott.
To the Editor of the New York Tribune:
Sir: Since I see in some of the journals hostile to Gen. Scott an attempt to disparage his personal qualities, especially his bearing toward subordinates, I beg leave to state through your columns what I know on the subject:

That the victor on so many battle-fields is a great warrior, no American can deny, without incurring contempt. That he has proved himself a sagacious and successful pacificator, no man of common sense and common honesty will question. But he is distinguished for traits still more rare and ennobling—strict impartiality and magnanimity; sterling qualities, which have seldom added their lustre to the chair of state since Washington relinquished it. To prove his claim to the first attributes I can say, with truth, that in the years I have been familiar with army affairs, I have never, in a single instance, heard him accused of favoring one officer at the expense of another. Of his magnanimity I will give an instance which will, I think, command the admiration of all who appreciate the extreme sensitiveness of military men in all that concerns rank and subordination.

My husband, when only a lieutenant, commanded a post for several years, which, from its position near the line of a British province, was of some importance. Of course it was complimentary to him, a subaltern, that it was entrusted to him. Gen. Scott was then the commanding officer of the Eastern Division of the army, and as such issued an order which my husband deemed to be an order which he thought it incorrect to obey, as he thought it incorrect, who, being of a different opinion, repeated the order. The lieutenant appealed to the War Department, and the Secretary sustained him. What would almost any other man have done with the "refractory subordinate," who thus dared to resist, not only the post of trust he occupied, but even his commission itself, because he thought himself right? Gen. Scott probably admired the noble spirit, which fearlessly discharged (as he himself has often done) his duty, regardless of consequences. It takes a man of honor to judge of a man of honor. I have often heard my husband speak with deep feeling of the General's magnanimity in never resenting, even by a cold look, the circumstances which have been narrated. "Better is that which rids his spirit than he that taketh a city," Gen. Scott has done both, and can do both again, if necessary.

Some years after my husband's death, hearing that I was in the same town with himself, he called to see me, "as a mark of respect to my husband." I had not before the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with the hero, but the benevolent and dignified courtesy evinced in that interview made an enduring impression on the saying that "to err is human—to forgive, divine!"

AN OFFICER'S WIDOW.
[From the Boston Journal.]
Large Estates.
Nothing exhibits the folly and weakness of human nature more conspicuously than a morbid desire for gain—a desire only increasing in intensity as the points of acquisition fixed by the accumulator at different periods, as the limit of his wishes, are successively obtained. How often does the rich man determine to take his case in the enjoyment of what he possesses when his fortune has reached a certain sum. Vain hope! The spirit of avarice is unslaked in his bosom, giving him no rest. The increasing tide of successful acquisition rolls along, bearing him upon its bosom; the hoarded gold accumulates in his coffers; he exercises over the soil a wider and wider sway; but his desires outrun his fortune. His heart grows more and more callous to the calls of humanity; the one idea absorbs his whole being, and robs him of every other enjoyment.

And for what end? To benefit his fellow-men by an enlightened application of his wealth? How seldom is a tithe of this hoarded treasure expended to bless mankind. If a dormant conscience, awakened at the last, or a desire for a name among posterity, induces him to set apart the avails of a life for any public object, how often does it happen that the whole or a large portion of the property is lost in ill-judged investments by dishonest trustees, or in litigation with disappointed heirs-at-law. Does he wish to build up a name and family on the strength of the golden accumulation? That very means, above all others, will hasten the downfall of any family, and bring them, with increased velocity, to the bottom of fortune's wheel.

The abolition of entailment, and the unfettering of estates, cause property to pass from family to family, from generation to generation, and the rich man accumulations, like the shifting sands, Fortune it is for the American people that it is so; for he who would pride himself upon his wealth is compelled to feel the instability of his position. The aristocracy of wealth is ephemeral as the morning mist. The shopkeeper or the artisan of the present generation is the progenitor of the millionaire of the next, if the step from respectability to aristocracy is not even shorter. The aristocracy of to-day often furnishes to the next generation its bar-room loungers and its most dissipated and useless citizens. The thoughtful study of human nature and human vicissitudes inculcates humility, charity, and mutual sympathy and respect.

"By their Fruits Ye shall know Them."
There is no surer standard than this of trying men and parties. And, tried by this standard, how miserably does Democratic practice accord with Democratic profession! Clay, Harrison, Taylor, Sumner, and now Scott, all Virginians, all denounced as Abolitionists, or under Abolitionist influence, whilst it was held to be rank blasphemy to retort this accusation upon any of the "Northern men with Southern feelings," whom the Democrats have recommended to the suffrages of the people! But what have been the deeds, the results, the fruits, which the two parties have brought forth? Look at Van Burenism, and the success of the Whimot proviso under Democratic administrations, and the overthrow of the Whimot proviso, the vindication of Southern rights, and the restoration of national peace and harmony under a Whig administration, whose leader the Democratic press were everywhere in the last Presidential campaign branding as an Abolitionist. If the Southern people are wise, they will place confidence for the future in those who are true in action rather than those who are loud in profession. In Scott and Graham they have two Southern men, born and raised among themselves, all whose interests, education, associations, and sympathies are with themselves. Of General Pierce they know but little. He belongs, it is true, to the old Hunker Democracy of the North, and until the recent developments by the Free Soil Democratic papers of New Hampshire, there was no reason to believe that he was not sound theoretically upon the subject of slavery as Gen. Scott. But, for our own developments, the Whigs of the North, and the Whigs of the South, the performance of Gen. Scott to Gen. Pierce. Admitted that the statements of the New Boston speech came from the Free Soil faction, they came at a time when it was not their interest to make them, and when they could not have been designed for effect in the South, because Gen. Pierce was not a candidate for Southern suffrages, nor was there any reason to believe that he ever would be.—Richmond Republican.

A Sign of the Times.
The Union of yesterday, under the head of "Signs of the Times," publishes a series of items to prove the desperate position of the Whig party, and the glorious attitude of its own. The following scrap is the first in the list:
"James E. Belsler, a distinguished citizen of Alabama, has withdrawn his name from the 'Union' electoral ticket."
The Union will perhaps inform its readers, in its next issue, that the Mr. Belsler alluded to was, until very recently, an influential and highly respected member of the Democracy, and that he is now a staunch supporter of General Scott. Mr. Belsler took a prominent part in the proceedings of the Scott ratification meeting at Montgomery, Alabama, and will make himself felt in the Democratic ranks before the close of the canvass. His change is one of the many "signs" that indicate the approaching discomfiture of Pierce and King.

"Who do you mean?" says he.
