The pretext set up in the senate for making appropriations for constructing three battle ships, i. e., for the special protection of our sea coasts, is about as far fetched and inappropriate as was old Granny Blair's proposition to warn England to keep away from this side of the ponds.

It is evident that the McKinley bill will not go through the senate on a dead run. Mr. Plumb is not the only member of that body that has already spoken out in meeting on the question.

PLUMB AND THE WEST.

The Tariff, the Silver and the Railroads.

However, much of it may have been criticised, the EAGLE'S declaration, the other day, that the time had come when economic questions were of more importance than political ones, was nevertheless true. And it is equally true that touching these material questions there is a conflict between the interests of the east and those of the west.

Any tariff law which can be enacted that will abundantly protect and conserve all the interests of the manufacturing east must inevitably prove a burden and an injustice to the producing west.

Any monetary measure that will meet the approbation of the money lender of the east must necessarily increase the sweat and physical turmoil of the producer of the west.

All legislation seeking to protect and render of par value the stocks of western railways, which railways are owned in the east, is an effort upon the part of the national law making power to cut from nearest the western man's heart "the pound of flesh."

Through a western David he made a king a Gold Goliah is ever found entrenched in the star chamber of Wall street as "the power behind the throne," whose mandates are those of the supreme tribunal of the land.

All the mighty engines of modern development on this continent are wielded, and all the wonderful powers of culminating enterprise marking the triumphs of this country since the war, have been directed by greed-masters of the Atlantic states, for whom the free sons of the west have become "hewers of wood and drawers of water," and upon all of whose homes and holdings, upon all of whose labors and savings a tribute has been laid by gold-potentates, the spirit of whose ruling giant hovers about and secretly manipulates only within the impenetrable and unfathomable environments of Wall street.

A hundred years, with the closing of this week, will have been counted since the peoples of the United States were first enumerated. With the first day of June the west will have completed its days of minority and of subjection. There is to be a new count, and a new adjustment, between the eastern master and the western servant, an economical as well as a political settlement in which a struggle between right and wrong, between malice and greed, will take place whereby the relative value of sweat and blood upon the one hand and that of cold gold upon the other will be determined.

In one end of the balances has been dumped the classes with their protected gold, protected stocks and protected manufactures. The need of the hour is a leader who can place in the other end of the balances the rights of the masses.

The flight over the tariff and of silver—classes and gold—has already commenced, and it is with no small degree of pleasure that we note from the heart and center of the great west comes a man in the person of Senator Plumb of Kansas who gives notice that for one he shall demand a fair and equal division.

As was seen in our dispatches of yesterday morning he calls for a "show down," and a balance sheet. He gives notice that if the McKinley bill with all its burthen is to be saddled upon the people of the west that it shall not be done blindly, nor yet under false pretenses. He demands a report, showing in parallel columns the figures imposed by the present tariff bill and those proposed by the McKinley bill, intimating by his words and attitude that while Reed may count a quorum, when it comes to the McKinley bill in the house, he cannot count the senate on that unrighteousness. But he does not stop at this. He gives further notice that touching the longer and further protection of gold by depreciating silver and by restricting the currency, a halt must be called, to which end he introduces a bill embodying the coinage proposition set forth by Banker St. John at the annual meeting of bankers last year at Kansas City, which proposition met with almost unanimous endorsement by western people, but which the gold-bugs have assiduously fought ever since.

It is hoped and expected that Senator Ingalls will stand by his colleague in these demands made in the name of the west, and which are in the interest of the people of all sections, the whole people, Wall street and its many Mammon monarchs excepted.

With a final victory crowning the efforts and demands of the west for their rights and simple justice in the matter of money which shall be paid them for their products, and the price which they shall pay for the products of others, there will remain but one other outrage and abuse which in remedying, all trusts and combines, all strikes and alliances will cease to exist and disappear forever. And this last remedy can only come from, through and by the power of the representatives of the producing west. We refer to transportation rates based upon and fixed by watered-stocks. As the EAGLE said some months ago, the greatest burthen, a burthen from which there is absolutely no return, still a burthen which comes of robbery, is the watered-stocks of railways, backed by interest-bearing guaranteed-bonds, the dividends upon which are wrenched from the unwilling consumer and tolled from the enslaved producer. All transportation charges are largely fixed and based upon values that never had an existence outside of a printed certificate of stock. If the transportation charges of the country were based upon the actual cost and expenses of the railroad instead of on watered-stock representing from two to five times the actual cost, such transportation charges would hardly be one-half what they are today. A railroad which costs ten, twelve, or fourteen thousand dollars per mile is stocked for twenty, fifty, and a hundred thousand per mile, which stock is bonded, the interest of which bonds must be paid by those who are compelled to use such roads.

A COURAGEOUS MINISTER.

The following brief but comprehensive synopsis of an address delivered before a large and appreciative congregation at the M. E. Church in Kingman, by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Tull, will be read with interest by many friends of that most worthy and estimable gentleman in this city who he resided for several years, and by the admirers or true christian courage and minliness extant.

Kingman, Kan., May 28, 1890.

In these days, when so many ministers of the gospel are being bullied into becoming political rascals by a lot of howling fanatics, who pervade every church organization and attempt to run things to suit their own perverse and biased ideas, it is a relief to find occasionally a minister with the moral courage and stamina to stand up and assert his rights by throwing aside with contempt the yoke which these people have attempted to put upon him.

The writer a stranger, happened to attend divine services in the M. E. church in this city Sunday evening, and found the church packed with an audience, gathered to hear a sermon on temperance. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Tull, did not preach a sermon, as was usually the case, but delivered a plain, straightforward "talk," which was right to the point in every particular. He prefaced his remarks by saying that he had been misrepresented and maligned infamously by a lot of misguided temperance people who misquoted him purposely, by saying that he was in the whisky business, that he was in sympathy with the whisky sellers, etc. These people had begun their attacks on him when he first came from Wichita by saying that the Wichita EAGLE spoke well of him when they were talking to do with him, for any man that Colonel Murdoch spoke well of was certainly in sympathy with rum sellers, etc. After talking thus these people tried to get him to come out openly as a political prohibitionist, and to the church to stump speakers and political howlers (most of whom howl for revenue only), and failing in this getting him to disgrace himself and the ministry, they continued their misrepresentation and lying with increased venom. The reverend gentleman, in reply to these charges of all the mean and dishonorable things they had done and then in the politest possible, but none the less effectual, manner he paid his compliments to them and their kind, handling them vigorously without gloves. In the course of these remarks he paid high compliments to the people of Wichita and a grand tribute to the editor of the EAGLE.

He then defined his position as a minister. It was his duty to preach the gospel of truth, love and mercy to all men, without consideration of race, color or creed. He believed in temperance but not more than he did in a life of general morality and godliness. No man deprecated more than he the fact that whiskey was sold and men made drunkards, and none would stop it sooner than he if it were in his power. But if the whisky came within his province as a minister of the gospel of Christ to call down curses on the man who dealt in rum. It was his duty to extend a helping hand to the dealer as well as to the drinker; to lift and lift up the sinner, and to give aid and comfort to the sinner by the saving word of Jesus Christ, not to persecute and ostracize him.

He defined the true temperance work as conducted on the saving plan of the gospel—such work as is being done by the great masses of a temperance people, Francis Murphy, and assured the people that though his ideas of the ways and means of accomplishing the great end might not be the most popular ones he would always be found on the side of right and truth in all his positions. His convictions were his own and no man or set of men or woman could force him to act against the dictates of his own conscience.

To the ladies of the W. C. T. U., who are doing so much for the good of the world in a selfless effort to drive out the saloons, he gave the following excellent suggestions, to which every true Christian will say "Amen!" "Ladies, if you will spend as much time in going into the streets and to the houses of shame, reclaiming your fellow sinners, you will accomplish untold good. Carry the gospel to these poor, degraded women, and when you have saved them they will thank you and bless you, which is something these rum sellers will never do."

The talk was a masterly one throughout and showed the speaker to be a man of unusual moral courage. I have given but a partial synopsis. The immense audience listened attentively throughout and outside of the half dozen or so "yes" and "no" answers to the questions were endorsed by the speaker universally commended. Surely Wichita sustained a great loss when Rev. Tull left there and Kingman experienced a corresponding gain. The people of the town are to be congratulated for their untiring having secured so able a pastor and one with the courage of his convictions.

A STRANGER.

SENATOR INGALLS ROBBED.

From the Washington Star.

Saturday afternoon some one, supposed to be a professional hotel thief, visited the room of Senator Ingalls at the Elms and helped himself to the diamonds and other jewelry in the room of Miss Ethel Ingalls. Little Miss Ethel Ingalls heard a noise in her sister's room, and knowing that Miss Ethel had gone to the Elms, she went to the room.

She found her sister's room empty, and she passed the stranger and went down stairs to give the alarm. When some of the boarders went up stairs the stranger had disappeared, and it was discovered that he had ransacked several rooms, but had only taken that jewelry.

The senator's home in Kansas was once robbed in the same way. The thief on that occasion also entered Miss Ethel's room and stole her jewelry. But that time the senator's Kansas thief, who took everything else in the shape of valuables he could find, left her medal on the bureau.

That's Right.

Wichita went after the next session of the Knights of Pythias grand lodge of the state and got it. Wichita seldom, very seldom, gets left when she goes after anything, and she is always well entertained in the Knights who attend the next annual encampment in a royal manner. See if she don't.

Would There Were More Such.

OKLAHOMA ORIGINAL PACKAGES.

A mineral spring has been discovered near El Reno which, the Press says, promises to develop into a valuable find.

It is said Oklahoma City will be lighted by electricity by July 4. The Chief says a company will push things from now on.

The postmaster at Guthrie has been ordered to change all money orders to read "Oklahoma" instead of "Indian Territory."

Stillwater has an organized band and the brass echoes will be resonant with discords for a season just as soon as the horns arrive.

The Capital declares that there is an absolute certainty that Guthrie will have the advantages of four new railways within the next year.

Norman Transcript: The prospects were never brighter in any county than they are at the present time for an abundant yield in crops.

The Oklahoma Chief thinks it is likely that the town site trustees will be appointed from outside of Oklahoma. Why, the Chief don't say.

A destructive storm passed over a section of country a few miles north of Stillwater last Sunday evening. Hail fell in great chunks, many of them being as large as goose eggs.—Gazette.

An old lady, 95 years of age, has taken a claim near Columbia. She takes care of her own team, and does all her own work. She has no doubt taken Horace Greeley's advice, and makes her reputation very general.—Oklahoma City Times.

Mr. C. M. Keller is up from the territory and reports everything getting along nicely down there. Twenty-five thousand people welcomed the governor and other territorial officials at Guthrie Friday, delegations from every town in Oklahoma. Mr. Keller is in a business at Reno City, and has given us a sketch of that part of the country taken from recent surveys. Following is a statement of the situation of the El Reno as furnished by Mr. Keller:

RENO SECTION OF OKLAHOMA.

RENO CITY was laid out as a government town site May 6th, 1890—plat filed, and is without doubt the grounds and owners of lots will receive titles soon as the town site commissioners are appointed. El Reno is on the south side of the Canadian river in a town situated on the northeast corner of which there are several contests and plat of which has never been filed. Congress in establishing territorial government for Oklahoma designated the northeast corner of the Indian Territory as a town site, there being no town by that name on record at general land office the people of the fourth congressional district of Oklahoma started a town and have a plat on file, named El Reno, adjoining Reno City, on the north side of the river, claiming the town site, and, contrary to the usual custom of putting new members on insignificant committees, they have consented to advance Mr. Carlisle to the leading committee at the very start.

A good many Democrats advocated the appointing of Carlisle to all the places occupied by Mr. Beck. The leading senator from Kentucky was a member of the finance, appropriation and woman's suffrage committees. Mr. Blackburn, however, asked to be transferred from the committee on territories to that of appropriations and in consequence Mr. Carlisle goes on territories instead of appropriations, but takes Mr. Beck's place on finance and woman's suffrage.

DISSENTIFIED REPUBLICANS EAST.

It has developed that a very large and wealthy section of the Republican party in the east are as much put out by the McKinley tariff bill, and are as outspoken in their feelings as the strongest protestants in the west. The Boston Transcript, the leading Republican paper of New England, a few days ago published five columns of reports of views of Boston merchants—nearly all Republicans—on the house tariff bill. The introduction says:

"Now that the message of the McKinley tariff bill to the house of representatives seems imminent the Boston importers of dutiable articles are awakening to the position in which they may shortly find themselves. Scarcely, if ever, in the history of the United States has an economic measure caused such widespread dissatisfaction among those who are most vitally concerned in it. No concerted movement in their own behalf has yet been inaugurated, but there is earnest talk of taking some immediate and co-operative step to insure their complaints being heard, and loudly heard, in Washington. Individual efforts have not been wanting in this direction. The Massachusetts delegation in congress has been petitioned from many quarters to spare no pains to avert what is termed 'the impending catastrophe,' but now it is generally agreed that a union of forces should be brought about. It is asserted by the leading importers of Boston that they have been treated with an indifference little short of contempt whenever they have attempted to secure a hearing from the powers that be in the national capital. They trust us and our claims," says one prominent woolen importer, "as though we were foreigners or enemies, and our arguments are met with either silence or platitudes that are worse than silence."

CARLISLE AS A SENATOR.

Washington Correspondence, St. Louis Republic.

Mr. Carlisle will qualify as a senator on Friday. If he were a superstitious person he would probably hesitate about entering upon such an important engagement on what is considered an unlucky day, but Mr. Carlisle was born on a Friday, he was nominated for congress on a Friday; he was nominated for the senate on a Friday; he started for Europe on a Friday; he started to return from Europe on a Friday, and in consequence of all these coincidences he will qualify as senator on Friday.

The Democrats of the senate are bestowing an extraordinary compliment upon him. He will be made a member of the finance committee, the committee on territories and the committee on woman's suffrage. This is the first time in the history of the senate that a new senator has been placed on the finance committee of the senate. The finance committee corresponds with the ways and means committee of the house. The senate is a very conservative body, and no matter how great a reputation a man may have he is invariably forced to take place at the rear end of the procession when he enters that body.

The disposition of the committee-hips held by Mr. Beck is in the hands of the Democrats, and, contrary to the usual custom of putting new members on insignificant committees, they have consented to advance Mr. Carlisle to the leading committee at the very start.
