WHO IS SITTING BULL?

GEN. CADMUS MARCELLUS WILCOX THINKS HIM A WEST POINT MAN.

His Opinion Is Based Upon the History of a Former Cadet Named McLain. This Man Was for Some Time a Minor Chief of the Arizona Mojaves.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—Is Sitting Bull, the Sioux chief, an ex-cadet of West Point Military academy? This is a startling question, and I shall let Gen. Cadmus Marcellus Wilcox, of Alabama, answer it. Gen. Wilcox, it is well to say by way of preface, was one of the bravest generals of the Confederate army.

"One of my classmates at West Point," says Gen. Wilcox, "was a young man named Thomas F. M. McLain. He came from Missouri, and was admitted to West Point in the year 1844. McLain was one of the most peculiar men I ever knew. There seemed to be something wild and solitary in his composition.

"This was the last I heard of Bison McLain for many years," continued Gen. Wilcox, "but a short time ago I met an old friend of mine, Capt. Paige, of the Confederate army. Paige was at West Point the same time I was, and of course knew McLain there. It was a startling story he had to tell me—a story which I might not have been inclined to believe but for my acquaintance with the narrator.

"Imagine, therefore, the surprise and consternation which my friend Paige and his comrades must have felt when one night a band of fifty Mojaves, unarmed, walked quietly into the midst of the camp and sat down around the fires. Their intentions were evidently peaceable, and beyond feeling to see that their revolvers were in place, ready for instant use, the white men made no demonstration.

"How are you, Paige?" he exclaimed. "You don't know me, do you?" "I certainly do not," replied Paige in amazement. "I knew you at West Point," continued the chief; "I am Bison McLain. Do you remember me?" "Paige stepped forward to shake hands with his old classmate, but a word from the latter spoken in French caused him to stop. McLain, for reasons of his own, did not want his followers to know that he and Paige had once been friends.

"I have the confidence of these Indians," he said to Paige, speaking in French in order to make sure that none of his followers caught even an inkling of what he was saying. "They think me a great war captain, and in truth the knowledge of the art of war which I gained at West Point has stood me in good stead in several engagements which we have had with the troops and with other tribes. It was with great difficulty that I restrained my people from attacking and destroying you days and days ago. You have been several times, all the time, in fact, in our power. But I have told the chiefs that we could gain nothing by killing you, as you were mere explorers, but that if we permit you to live and return to your people many of them will follow you either for the purpose of finding cover, and that when the immigrants come we shall reap a rich harvest. This argument has prevailed, and you will be permitted to finish your exploration unmolested. If other white men come into this valley
