The late Princess Anhaltine, wife of Count Waldemar Wartenberg, was immensely popular in Vienna society, where her handsome figure and conversational ability fully atoned for her lack of personal beauty. In private theatricals she was a moving spirit, having, like her mother, natural histrionic abilities of no mean order.

Death of a Famous Gypsy. The Journal of Gypsy Lore records the death of Sylvester, Boswell, a notable Gypsy who, who ended his days in a workhouse in England. He was born at Dover, where his father was a soldier in charge of the big gun known as "Queen Anne's pocketpiece." On his discharge he went to Yorkshire, where he brought up most of his family. His death was killed by a hand a cousin were territorial by lightning at Tetford, in Lincolnshire. Sylvester had the wandering instincts of his race. He married at Vermont, and his eight children were born respectively at Benwick, Aylesbury, Tottenham, Sutton, Flatton and Woodbridge.

His real age was 79, but the gypsies thought him to be at least 100, and he was accordingly called the "Deep Roman." He would read and write, and specimens of his literary efforts are given in Crofton's "Dialect of the English Gypsies." On one occasion he attended a meeting of the Manchester Literary club—a non-gypsy night—and those who were present will not readily forget his amazingly characteristic speech. One of his efforts, printed by Mr. Crofton—see his only one to be seen—is remarkable as a confession of religious faith works, if, in fact, it is yet a character to suppose those who look upon the gypsies as profane blasphemers.

NEW JEWELS AND FICUS. Flashing stones of no particular color, especially when brought into contrast with a really fine, well chosen stones of pure and flawless water.

Necklaces of solid gold beads will be very popular for young ladies, and bracelets of gold and silver filigree will be very much worn, with very few bangle bracelets.

Watches with fine long chains will be worn in little side pockets, though some chateaux chains as well as ball chains are seen.

Fichus and lace neckwear generally have taken a new lease of favor, and are made of crepe lace, china crepe and chiffon, bordered by lace of various designs and kinds, and finished with ribbon bows and loops.

These last are often made so that several different colors can be worn with the same fichu, and this worn with a plain black silk or gray or white gown, or even gowns of other colors, makes substantially new toilets.

This changing about of bits of ribbons, etc., can be carried to a great extent. I know a young lady who went to Saratoga with only four dresses, yet she had devised these so cunningly, each in its relations to the other, that she really had sixteen apparently different gowns.

Exactly how it was done I am going to ask her, and then tell my sister women about it.

I saw recently such a dainty, pretty home dress for a young lady that I feel like a missionary as I sit here writing a description of it. The wearer was a slender, dark-eyed and dark haired young girl of 19, and the dress in question was a cream white serge, made princess style, with a demi-traine at the back.

In the front there was a brettelette shaped drapery reaching to a point, and the front skirt drapery was slightly lifted on the right hip. The sleeves opened half way up the forearm, and buttoned with bronze-green velvet buttons with silver rivets, and there were loops of narrow bronze-green velvet, a narrow line of which also defined the opening. The same style of trimming, with buttons and velvet, was carried out on the skirt and waist. With it she wore a plain turn down collar of white silk, and a silver comb was fastened in the hair. Now wasn't that a dainty, pretty dress?

Another handsome gown—for this for the promenade—pleased me greatly. It was

By and by the prices went away down, and as the old man had cleared about $100,000 out of the scheme he retired, built himself a fine mansion and lived at ease. He is the only man I know of who got rich by catching frogs, but I have heard of several others."—Boston Globe.

THE FAMOUS STRASBOURG CLOCK. The Strasbourg clock has been for about 200 years one of the wonders of the world. It has been written about until students of descriptive literature are almost familiar with it as if they had seen it. Its chief performances are, in addition to its astronomical features, a procession of the apostles and saints around the central figure, Jesus. This procession is preceded by the feeble crowing of a cock at 12 o'clock, and some of the motions are accurate to such a degree that it is said that if shut up with the clock would have no difficulty in keeping the run of the seasons and the motions of the principal heavenly bodies.—Jeweler's Weekly.

Keeps a Bachelor Shop. There are perhaps a dozen bachelor shops in the city kept by women, but not one is to be compared with Mrs. Henry Nassou's in Sixth avenue. The walls are finished in pistachio green, all the counters, the fish stand and vegetable tables are marble topped, and I assure you might as your next best friend be listed at Nassou's. The shop is certainly well kept, and is run in such a manner as to fasten it.

The Samoans are very fond of children, but yet no real affection or strength of family ties exist. The main idea is to gain strength in numbers and become a great family by making connections with outsiders, both by marriage and adoption.

If any one urges them to provide for the future they will say, "To-morrow? Who knows if I may live till to-morrow? I may not need anything to-morrow." Truly the motto, "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof," might well be hung in their homes.

Stones heated red hot are used for cooking. A shallow trench is dug, and stones of various sizes heaped on a fire of wood. When they are red the food is wrapped in green banana leaves, placed on the stones and covered with many layers of leaves to keep the steam in.

The Samoans regard all foreigners to this day as "heaven-bursts," because when the natives first saw the whites and their vessels in the horizon it seemed to their simple minds as if they were descending from the heavens, so they called the strangers "papalagi," or "heaven-bursts."

THE LATEST IN JEWELS. A pair of old sleeve buttons are of pale green enamel with a light tinted cabochon ruby in their centers.
