RIDING ON PILLIONS.

IT USED TO BE THE FASHION AND IS NOW A CURRENT FAD.

Hyde Park, London, Has for Some Time Witnessed Pillion Riding, and Ward McAllister Has Tried It in Central Park. How Soon Will It Become General?
[Copyright by American Press Association.]
As we approach the end of the century we revert in fashionable things to the styles of a hundred years ago. To be sure we call these fashions by another name—fads, but they are none the less re-

PILLION RIDING IN THE GOOD OLD DAYS. viduals of bygone years. In London the exquisite is trying as fast as he dare to put on again the graceful shoe buckle. He wears on his feet a pair of brilliant "patent pumps" which are tied with a black ribbon in a broad bow, and he arranges his trousers with a view to display this introduction of the silver buckle. In sport and outdoor exercises the same spirit of revival prevails in England and along the eastern coast of these United States.

One form of this, and perhaps the most romantic form, is the incipient craze for "pillion riding." Already in Hyde Park mounted couples are to be seen going up and down Rotten row at a gentle canter, the gentleman trying to do two different things at once—manage his cob in the crowded carriage and fascinate the gentle creature behind him. She, seated as easily and gracefully as if she were in a rocking chair or a plush lined victoria, displays to the full the elegance of her costume, and both seem to enjoy the attention they naturally attract. In fact the pillion has put the tricycle out of joint, so to speak, and the ladies who once avowed envy by their graceful management of the wheels are forced to frequent bypaths.

"Pillion riding" cannot be said to be domesticated yet. In New York's Central park, but wait—and you will not have to wait long. Already in the country clubs the guests ride "double," and what meets with favor out of town is sure to be taken up in ville.

But what is a pillion? somebody asks. It is a thick, firm, well-stuffed, wide and level cushion, extending quite across the broadest part of the horse, with two deep flaps, one on either side. It is covered on the outside with fine drab tapestry to save the lady's dress, and this cover is generally quilted or embroidered, and bound with ornamental braid. At the back of the pillion is a strong leather handle, which can be put up or down, working with a hinge. There is, besides, a comfortable footstool three or four feet high, and the statue of the discoverer is to be twenty-one feet high. The figure of Columbus will wear a loose blouse, and a Spanish cloak blown from the form by the wind, and he will be represented as standing on the deck of a vessel whose prow and stern will be hewn from the granite base of the structure. The feet of the navigator will stand apart as though the figure supported by them were swaying with the ship's motion, and the whole attitude of the figure will suggest the daring voyager in action, glass in hand, watching, and expecting developments ahead.

The groups at the corners of the base are to represent Peace and Brotherhood, the latter symbolized by the white and black races clasping hands; Enlightenment, the education of the masses; Science, with the muse Urania bearing up the starry hemispheres for Astronomy and Geography to study; and the Fine Arts, with Apollo and his lyre and Sculpture and Painting on either hand.

The Indians.
Officials of the Indian bureau, missionaries and others—surprise us with the statement that the "rapid extinction of the aborigines," so often mentioned, is a myth. At any rate, several tribes of Indians have actually increased in the last ten or twenty years. Though their former decrease may have been as great as alleged, the tide has turned; at any rate, it is stationary. The number of Indians in the United States has remained remarkably constant for several years, in the neighborhood of 250,000. Perhaps we may yet have a real aboriginal state in the Union—a true Oklahoma.

Young lovers, after having a dime split in half, each take a portion and get their jeweler to mount it in any peculiar manner that appeals to their fancy. Many curious and quaint and bracketed baubles are the result.

The Buttons Were Returned.
"There has evidently been a misapprehension," stated the minister after the collection for the heathen had been taken up, "among certain members of this congregation concerning the heathen's costume. I will state that they do not wear pants."
—New York Herald.

forlorn, and as this age is without argument utilitarian, the statement advanced above is proved. High bred, narrow shaped horses will be relegated while the fat endures to the race track; the Arabian courser to poetry, and animals like those in Rosa Bonheur's "Horse Fair"—horses with broad bodies and a forward tail tell the better—will have everything their own way in Central park.

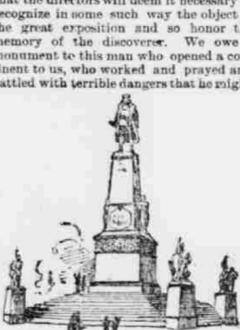

And now as to the pace required to insure comfort and safety. It has already been stated that the pleasure of the pillion is dependent on circumstances—the first of which is the pace of the animal the rider upon. He must not go with a long, launching gait, or the poor woman would roll like a boat in a rough sea. A quiet, regular jog trot, never lifting the feet high above the ground, is the gait the horse must travel. This trot is just the next degree in swiftness to a faster, a pace into which horses naturally fall, and which, when their spirits are not too high, they seem to prefer to any other.

Provided these conditions are preserved, also that the horse is strong enough for the weight of two persons, both animal and rider, and that the rider is prepared for an immense distance without actually suffering from fatigue. Pushed beyond this pace, spurred into a brisk trot, or, worse, into a gallop, both horse and rider present a spectacle as grotesque as Tam and his gray mare Meg, with the witches behind it, and the "Percheron" horse has no power whatever to accommodate herself to such extraordinary circumstances. Off falls her hat. Down streams her hair. She screams and clasps her escort around the neck, and both no doubt end by heartily wishing the pillion relegated to the oblivion of the rest of the antique trappings of the last century.

How to mount the pillion? There must be an "upping stone." You will see these still standing at the gates of some of the churches and in front of some doors in the old towns of New York and Massachusetts. But a chair or stepladder will serve the purpose, although it is hardly orthodox. A slight that may be termed picturesque, and which turned the imaginations of the park policemen—if they have any—back to 1800, might have been witnessed as early as 6 o'clock on the morning of Monday, Nov. 3, when three actors in this pretty drama, one furtive and yet determined—a jaunty looking man under any circumstances—in truth, Mr. Ward McAllister, who "found" the society; the second a very pretty young lady, perhaps a relative, who thoroughly enjoyed the situation, and the last a horse, big enough to carry the "Percheron" breed, who took part against his will. Time, as said, 6 in the morning; place, the drinking fountain in Central park just back of the General Grant bridge. From the edge of this fountain the young lady climbed to her place, which Mr. McAllister locked every night with his key. No sooner was she in place and smoothing down her plume than the horse began to plunge and kick. A policeman ran to assist, but the horseman waved him off and saved on the reins, while he cautioned his partner to hold tight to the handles. She obeyed, and after a few circles around the fountain the animal quieted down, and the couple rode northward out of sight. This was the rehearsal, conducted as secretly as possible. When will the public representation occur? FRANCIS LIVINGSTON.

IN MEMORY OF COLUMBUS.
Design for a Monument to Be Erected at Chicago.
Monuments to the great discoverer are now in order. A tablet on a little old stone house in Valladolid, Spain, reads, "Here died Columbus." His highplow, Genoa, honors him with a bust and a collection of autograph letters displayed in the hall of the town council. A Spanish sculptor, Sunal, has designed a splendid statue to be set up in Central park, New York. The Chicago World's fair committee will consider a project to establish a permanent memorial in honor of the great celebration of 1892.

A sketch has already been prepared by Artist Julius Gelet, and The Chicago Herald says of the proposal: "It is hoped that the directors will deem it necessary to recognize in some such way the object of the great expedition, and so honor the memory of the discoverer. We owe a monument to this man who opened a continent to us, who worked and prayed and battled with terrible dangers that he might achieve stupendous results." The design of Mr. Gelet is for a monument seventy-five feet in height. The base is to be of granite and sustain four groups and a statue. The groups are to consist of figures twelve feet high, and the statue of the discoverer is to be twenty-one feet high. The figure of Columbus will wear a loose blouse, and a Spanish cloak blown from the form by the wind, and he will be represented as standing on the deck of a vessel whose prow and stern will be hewn from the granite base of the structure. The feet of the navigator will stand apart as though the figure supported by them were swaying with the ship's motion, and the whole attitude of the figure will suggest the daring voyager in action, glass in hand, watching, and expecting developments ahead.

The groups at the corners of the base are to represent Peace and Brotherhood, the latter symbolized by the white and black races clasping hands; Enlightenment, the education of the masses; Science, with the muse Urania bearing up the starry hemispheres for Astronomy and Geography to study; and the Fine Arts, with Apollo and his lyre and Sculpture and Painting on either hand.

St. Louis to Colorado via Wichita.
Commencing Sunday, July 31, 1890, the Missouri Pacific railway will run through sleeping cars from St. Louis via Pleasant Hill, Rich Hill, Fort Scott and Wichita to Empress and from thence to Pueblo, Colorado Springs and Denver. This change was made on account of a great many people from the east going to Colorado being desirous of going via Wichita. The train will stop here two hours, giving all a chance to view the "Peerless Princess" and still land passengers in Colorado same as if they had gone via Kansas City. It also gives the citizens of Wichita sleeping car service from here to Colorado. Returning, it gives us through sleeping car service Wichita to St. Louis, and gives the Colorado people a chance to go east via Wichita. This change will undoubtedly be appreciated by the traveling public, and especially by the citizens of Wichita. If you are going east or west, go via the popular new through route. Through chair and sleeping car service. New route just completed between Fort Scott and Rich Hill goes through the finest mineral and agricultural country in the west. Don't forget the new short line to St. Louis or Colorado.
