WICHITA MARKETS

The Receipts of Stock at the Wichita Union Stock Yards for the Past 24 Hours Were as Follows: 37 Cattle, 210 Hogs, Shipments, 54 Cattle, 223 Hogs.

CATTLE

WICHITA, July 25. Today's cattle receipts were light as usual for several weeks past, and the market was nearly steady with common stuff weaker. Only a small per cent of the stuff on the market of late is good enough for the butchers and the remainder goes to the speculators.

Table with columns: Description, Price. Lists various types of cattle and their market prices.

One packer and a speculator were alone in the hog market today, and they cleaned up everything in the yards. The general market here was about steady up to the receipt of the close of eastern markets.

HUSBAND HUNTING

An Occupation in Which Detectives Excel.

LONG SEARCH FOR PAT CONWAY.

He Left Home with His Only Son and Was Found After a Chase Covering Three Continents—Looking for a Gay Detective.

An expert detective has often been likened to a bloodhound—once either strikes a trail there is no let up until the scent disappears.

The most remarkable searches of recent times have been those of the whites think he is Nige Parsons, a miner, who went into that region thirty years ago, while others think him a recently escaped lunatic.

As long as he scared no one but Chinamen the whites thought it was merely their imagination, but a few days ago Mr. J. D. Collins, a wealthy stock rancher, got a shock which he describes in these words:

"I started to walk across a little swale on a log. When I reached the middle my hair suddenly rose on end. Sitting on the log at the farther side, partly hidden in the brush, sat a human shape looking intently at me. I stood in amazement. It was a man, dressed in the skin of a deer tanned his waist, while his shoulders, his arms and his legs to the knees were bare. A long, grizzled beard and matted hair, white as snow, fell about his breast and shoulders.

"He sat crouching, as though trying to hide from me, yet he saw plainly enough that I was discovered. His eyes had a wild look, but nothing fierce or dangerous. The look reminded me more of a wild animal that is frightened and has no means of escape. I thought I could detect a look for pity in his eyes as they were fixed upon me. Over his left eye was a deep scar, partly concealed by the shaggy hair that fell over his forehead."

Mr. Collins spoke, and the wild man fled. After a long chase his pursuer again got near enough to speak, when the wild man raised a stone in a threatening way. Then he dashed into a thicket of brush and disappeared. The Chinese shepherds are so demoralized that nothing can be done with them, and the few white settlers they will have to hunt down and capture the outcast before their employes will return to their herds. Nige Parsons, the miner, was injured in the head by a blast just before he took to the woods, thirty years ago, but the chances are that he is not the wild man.

A SCIENTIST FATALLY BURNED.

The Tragical Death of an Instructor at Columbia College.

Dr. John I. Northrop, the young scientist and instructor in geology at Columbia college, New York, has added another sad chapter to the history of the world.

The truth that familiarity with danger breeds contempt, that contempt too often breeds carelessness and carelessness breeds death. He went to the spirit vault of the college to draw some alcohol for his experiments, and he lighted a match there, as his attendant thinks, or was careless with the light. The vault had long been closed and gas had generated, there was an explosion and Dr. Northrop was enveloped in flames.

All this course is lamentably denied by the parties charged. They reduce the time of delay to ten minutes and aver that nothing was said about pay. It is only another one of the numerous quarrels between physicians and hospitals in New York. The sad fact about which there is no dispute is that on the surface of Dr. Northrop's body was scorched to a crisp, and that, as all the physicians agree, he died of the shock. Whether any treatment, however prompt and skillful, could have saved him is extremely doubtful.

A Horrible Case of Wife Murder.

There have been several instances of shocking wife murders recorded by the papers of England and America lately, but barring the case of the now deceased woman who killed a woman over the cliff at Niagara Falls not long ago, the pair for cold blooded brutality must be accorded a Frenchman of Livry, a small place near Paris. One evening the fellow walked with his wife along the side of a railway track.

As a train approached the fellow halted the woman in front of the engine. She uttered a shriek as the fall, and the car passed over her body. The engineer having succeeded in bringing the engine to a standstill, got down and found that the woman was mangled horribly, her head and one of her legs having been separated from the body. In the meantime the guard ran after the man and arrested him. The delinquent, who is a laborer employed at Livry, when taken before an officer of gendarmes, protested emphatically that he was innocent of the charge of murder, and alleged that his wife had thrown herself on the rails after he had been quarrelling. The engineer, on the other hand, is positive in his affirmation as to the guilt of the accused.

From the Ballroom to the Lake.

One of the most sensational of recent incidents was that of Fraulein Helene Horning, a young and beautiful girl, the daughter of a wealthy and distinguished resident of Hamburg, a suburb of Berlin. She rushed from a ballroom in which a select party was assembled, ran down the street in all possible haste, and jumped into a lake, where she was drowned. Six or seven ladies and gentlemen followed her, shouting after her and entreating her to return. The girl was in full ball costume, she had an attraction in the ballroom with the gentlemen, to whom she was engaged, became hysterical and ran off with the expressed intention of drowning herself.

The Mistake Corrected.

The ruler of a small German state made his entry into a certain town. Just as the burgomaster was delivering himself of a speech an ass began to bray most horribly, until the prince at last exclaimed:

"Will some one make that donkey be quiet?"

The poor burgomaster made a sudden pause in his speech and inquired, in evident alarm, "Does your highness mean me?"

"No, the other one," the prince replied.

THINK 'HE'S A 'WHITE DEVIL'

Chinese Sheep Herders in California Frightened by a Wild Man.

There is a wild man in Fresno county, Cal. He dresses (a little) in skins, lives on what he can pick up, and goes about scaring the Chinese sheep herders in the wilds of King's river canyon and the adjacent mountain fides. The Chinese are so accustomed to the white devil that they are not frightened by him.

As long as he scared no one but Chinamen the whites thought it was merely their imagination, but a few days ago Mr. J. D. Collins, a wealthy stock rancher, got a shock which he describes in these words:

"I started to walk across a little swale on a log. When I reached the middle my hair suddenly rose on end.
