THE NATIONAL MUSEUM.

WASHINGTON PEOPLE HAVE BEEN SHOWING IT TO SCIENTISTS.

It is indeed an Institution for All Patriotic People to be Proud of, and Mr. Graves Here Writes of It Enthusiastically and Entertainingly.

(Special Correspondence.) WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—We have been very scientific here at the capital for a week or two past. We had first the great American Association for the Advancement of Science, with hundreds of learned and earnest men and women enthusiastic in their search of wisdom. Then came the American geologists, with their wild eyes well speckled, and their love for stones and specimens and fossils showing itself at every step. We laymen of the capital joined hands with them and pretended to be as wise as our visitors. We attended lectures with them, listened to their discussions, drove them about our beautiful city and, last and best of all, took them to see an institution in which we take great pride, and in which we knew they would take great interest. That is the National Museum.

You ought to have seen the glow upon the faces of our guests as they wandered through the labyrinthine corridors of our big museum and feasted their eyes upon the great show of the earth's living and dumb things there to be seen. "Ah!" exclaimed one gray haired scientist, "this is wonderful, wonderful! Here we have the organic and the inorganic world at our feet. Here we have a chance to see at our ease and leisure all the things that could be seen in fifty years of travel and research. I should like to live across the street from this place, and spend the remainder of my days in this museum. You Washingtonians do not appreciate your opportunity."

It is true that the museum has become an institution of wonderful interest, not only to the scientist, to whom every article appeals so eloquently with its story of relationship to the sum total of things and the principles of evolution, but to the common people. Though not yet as great as the British museum or the museums maintained by some other foreign governments, it is young and has a great future before it. Born only thirty years or so ago, it was at first nothing but a collection of curiosities which had been given to the United States by foreign powers or sent here by consuls or naval officers. Once it consisted of nothing more than a heterogeneous cabinet in the patent office. In 1847 the first step was taken toward establishing something coherent and creditable, congress passing a law establishing a national museum.

The report of the city engineer in regard to flushing certain sewers from the race was referred to the sewer committee and city engineer.

The final estimate of city engineer on brick pavement on Central between Main and Market was read and the treasurer and committee were instructed to pay the contractor.

Ordinances regarding back stands, opening Waco from Walnut to Tenth streets, providing for more sidewalks, appropriating $2,002.50 on thirty first estimate on city building and appropriating money for miscellaneous purposes were read and passed.

The mayor appointed P. V. Healy, W. J. Holbrook and J. T. Reece as a committee to condemn the property to be made into Waco street which were confirmed by the council.

The bids for a bridge across Little river on Eleventh street were opened, and J. K. Sawyer's bid being the lowest he was awarded the contract at $1,920. Several bids were received and all were very close. Council adjourned to meet again next Monday night.

While a well known and prominent farmer was driving into town yesterday afternoon, coming in through the residence portion of the city, he was assaulted by a lot of young boys, who besides throwing at the gentleman with clods, hurled epithets and slurs such as hayseed, clod hopper etc., at him. These children should be taught different by their parents. Such actions show poor breeding and instructions.

A well known society young gentleman went to see his best girl last Sunday evening. It so happened that the day before the front porch of the house was newly painted and a ladder lying in front of the door so as to keep any one from stepping into the paint. The young man stepped up to the porch when he perceived the obstruction. A number of young gentlemen who witnessed the scene are much amused over the numerous strange maneuvers he went through before succeeding.

Professor Worrall of Topeka is in the city hunting specimens for the world's fair. He finds it a difficult matter to secure cereals, wheat, rye, barley, etc., in the stalk or in bundles. Notwithstanding the immense crop grown in the valley this year, the display at the various county fairs in this line is very small. He says in all his travels throughout the state attending the different fairs, he finds that the corn in Sedgewick county very much the best.

UNKNOWN world in the shape of hundreds of meteoric stones. One of these known as the Tucson meteorite—is the largest in this country and one of the largest in the world. It is in the form of an immense silver ring, and weighs 1,400 pounds. Two or three hundred years ago it was found by Jesuit missionaries at Sonora, Mexico, and one of them endeavored to ship it to Spain. He carried it no further than Tucson, where it was abandoned and after lying for a long time in the street, it was found by a collector for the museum found it, lying half buried in the street, and took possession of it, no one claiming it.

Near the beautiful rotunda of the museum, in which the plaster Goddess of Liberty now stands, is a hall which the women visitors spend much of their time in. It is popularly known as China Hall. Here are specimens of every known make of pottery in the world, from the rude mud vessels baked in the sun by Australian aborigines and the red earthenware of the Aztecs to the finest productions of Limoges, Sevres, Hungary and Wedgwood. There is a pair of Faience vases more than seven feet high and valued at $9,000. Another pair of vases, made by the celebrated manufacturers of Limoges, and after exhibition at the centennial presented to the government, are known as the Haviland vases, and their value is said to be $16,000. There are collections of the pottery of Japan, Turkey, ancient Rome, Brazil and Mexico, but the most important and interesting feature of the ceramic display is the vast series of pottery made by our Indians, and especially by the Puebloans or village Indians of the valleys of the Colorado and Rio Grande.

Within the shadow of the Goddess of Liberty is found the largest collection of stuffed animals in this country. The visitor finds here a magnificent array of bears and lions and tigers and orang-utans and every animal known, from the weasel to the elephant. One of the most interesting features of the display is the vast series of pottery made by our Indians, and especially by the Puebloans or village Indians of the valleys of the Colorado and Rio Grande.

conspicuous objects in the museum is a large case of orang-outangs or Primates, as our friends the scientists would call them, represented as they are standing fidelity by the former chief taxidermist, Mr. Hornaday, as climbing about the branches of a tree and engaged in one of those little family disputes which it seems even our forefathers and mothers occasionally indulged in. Both of these orangs were killed by Mr. Hornaday himself and he has the bones, while making collections there for Professor Ward, of Rochester. This collection is notable for the large number of western American specimens, many of which were brought home by the earliest explorers in the wild regions of the Rocky mountains and British America. They bear labels of fixed years and years ago by Audubon and Bachman, by the naturalists of the Wilkes exploring expedition, the Hudson Bay company and the many surveying, exploring and geographical expeditions sent out under the auspices of the government.

The museum is said to have the finest model of a whale in the world. A whale is not easily studied in life. He will not sleep in the sun to be photographed, as will a lion or rattlesnake; he is a monarch who declines to be surveyed, and it is not easy to capture him for the purpose of taking his picture or his measurement. Even the whalers who harpoon him and bring him to terms and the frypan alongside their vessels see but one side of him at a time. Some years ago a large humpback whale came ashore on the beach of Cape Cod and there and the country set up two his huge body. Probably he was sick when he decided to come ashore and beach himself and leave his remains to science. At any rate the opportunity was too good a one to be lost, and a gang of men were collected with wagons, tools and thirty or forty barrels of plaster, and the whale's body was whaled with plaster, well moistened and packed down. From the model thus obtained the whale now on exhibition in the museum was built up of wood and other substances and painted to represent the original with a fidelity that would surely be convincing to the general whaler's public, but know what good use has been made of his carcass.

There are a dozen or so of the thousands of equally interesting collections and objects to be seen in the museum. Two of which are always surrounded by visitors are the Franklin printing press, and the printing press used by the first printer in this country.

Already the collections on hand in our museum have outgrown the room available for their display, and as the World's exposition at Chicago year after next is expected to add as much as is now on hand, it is easy to see that congress will soon find it necessary to appropriate money for the erection of an annex as large as the present building. If the museum has grown to such enormous proportions in a quarter of a century, what will be the condition of the world in a hundred years hence? I fully agree with the white haired scientist whom I escorted to the museum, and who said, with much feeling, "If there is a hereafter, with me, and I believe there is, I am going to get the legs for me some day here on this floor for an hour or two to use in the National museum what progress the world is making in science and exploration and industry."

Machines for opening and cleaning cotton have been improved by an automatic feeding apparatus, applied to the feed apron, and by means of which one man can tend two machines when being fed with raw or ball cotton easier than with more or less tend one. A large amount of waste and leaf is extracted by this device.

A POET'S WORKSHOP. The Immortal Browning Wrote His Last Poems in a Kitchen. "What a curious place to select" was my first thought as I stood at the door of the queer old house. I walked up twelve or fifteen hard stone steps, grasping the banister to guide myself in the dark, and was soon warmly welcomed by Signora Tabacchi as, passing through the kitchen, I was ushered into the sitting room. "Scrupulously clean and neat," was my next impression, but how plain! This cradle of "Asiandale" was only a piece of the kitchen partitioned off for back parlour purposes, a glass door and window separating the two.

The thin cotton curtain might possibly screen the mysteries of culinary processes from the poet's eye, but his ear must have been caught by occasional sounds of hacking and chopping, and certainly no kettle could have boiled, no wood could crackle or increase arise from that adjacent hearth without making itself distinctly noticeable. Such was his study and his drawing room, a multum in parvo, about twelve feet square.

The furniture is of the good old lodgings type—that is, as regards the style only, for Signora Tabacchi would not tolerate a saw, a mop or a tannish, as do some of the older school of landladies. There is a large round pedestal table with a red cloth table cover, inoffensive in its pattern; one half was devoted to his papers; on the other luncheon was served for his sister and himself. A full length sofa, uncompromisingly hard, takes up the greater part of one wall; a kind of sideboard stands opposite.

On the chifferoni, between the two windows, rests the looking glass, and half a dozen mahogany chairs, cane bottomed and severe backed, but of good old design, complete the arrangements. On the fresh colored walls hang a series of prints, illustrating events in the history of Venice. Dogs are disporting themselves in most conventional attitudes, the vanquished are kneeling before the victors, and one has a general impression that history involves a great amount of howling and scraping—Felix Moschles in Scribner's.

Making Spectacle Lenses. The bit of glass to be formed into a lens is fastened by means of pitch to a small block of hard rubber so that it may be pressed against a rapidly revolving metal tool, whose curvature is equal and opposite to that desired in the lens. This is known as the "rough tool" and is made of cast iron. It is mounted on a vertical spindle, and is kept moistened with emery more or less of the finer grades of emery are used in succession, changing from coarse to fine as the grinding proceeds. As a result of this process the glass has a rough surface and is no longer transparent. It is now transferred to the "fine tool." This is made of brass and has its surface as true as possible. It is compared from time to time with a standard curve in order to insure accuracy.

In the second grinding the abrading material is removed (carefully calced and plate of iron). Finally, the lens is polished by being pressed against a piece of cloth powdered with rouge and fastened to the rotating tool. The glass is now loosened from its block, turned over, and the reverse side of the lens ground. When this has been accomplished the lens must be cut down to the proper shape for mounting in the spectacle frame. It is placed on a leather cushion and held firmly in position by a rubber tipped arm while a diamond glass cutter passing around an oval guide traces a similar oval on the glass below.

The superfluous glass outside the oval is removed by steel grinders, the rough edges are ground smooth on Scotch wheels and the lens is ready for mounting. The glasses for small telescopes, microscopes, burning glasses and the like are ground in the same fashion.—Prof. C. H. Henderson in Popular Science Monthly.

Hannibal's First Meeting with Lincoln. Hannibal Hamlin never met Abraham Lincoln until the day after their nomination in May, 1860. The introduction took place in the old Tremont House in Chicago, and from the beginning the two candidates seemed mutually prepossessed with each other, a feeling which developed afterward into a profound friendship.

Mr. Hamlin used to tell with a great deal of glee the manner of receiving the news of his nomination. He was sitting in one of the rooms of the old Tremont playing euchre with a party of politicians. Suddenly the noise of a party was heard in the corridor without. Such events were not unusual in a hotel filled with delegates, so the game was not interrupted. But just as a deal had been finished and the trump turned, Schuyler Colfax burst into the room, without stopping to rap at the door, and announced: "Come, come, Hamlin, this is no place for you. You're nominated for vice president and must come over and make a speech."

"So I went over to the hall and made them a little talk," Mr. Hamlin used to add pathetically, "but I spoiled the very best lions hand I ever held."—Chicago Herald.

How Folks Sleep in Paris. Everybody in this country sleeps in hammocks, or, as they call them, reds. In each house will probably be found one draped with a canopy of lace or mosquito netting and dressed, as the ladies say, with sham pillows, creating the impression that it is more for ornament than for use. If there be a dozen in a family, each will have his or her own red, and if necessary be prepared to swing it up and walk underneath it, and they all swing and talk themselves to sleep, the pendulum motion of the reds only ceasing when they become too weary to reach out and kick it into motion again.—Paris Cor. I SAW HER IN THE MORNING. I saw her in the morning, Her face like morning pale, She walked among the roses, A wild rose in her hair, She sang a tender ditty, I met and listened long— She stood in the meadow, 'Twas sung so sweet a song.

I saw her when the shadows fell long upon the sea, She stepped among the water-lilies, More fair than they were she, Her gentle voice was sweet, And like a blessed angel, She moved along the sea.

I saw her in the evening, When twilight's latest ray Fell o'er the snowy hillsides— In gentle sleep she lay, Upon her bow the roses, The stars on her breast, And she, upon her cheek, pale face A smile of peace and rest. —Donatone's Monthly.
