

LiveStock Commission Merchants

The firms given below are representative ones in their line. Shippers should correspond directly with names given:

WICHITA MARKETS. The Receipts of Stock at the Wichita Union Stock Yards for the Past 24 Hours were: Cattle, 50; Hogs, 951. Shipments: None.

WICHITA, Dec. 31. There was a larger supply of cattle today with a preponderance of common to medium grades, although there was a sprinkling of good stuff among today's offerings. Salesmen experienced no trouble in disposing of good stuff and the prices at which most trades were made were steady at yesterday's figures.

The quotations here presented are to give the shipper an idea of the general range of prices. The various classes and grades sold within the limits of these quotations, according to the quality of offerings and the state of the daily market. These quotations are only changed when there has been a permanent change in the general market. The representative names should be referred to for the daily quotations.

Why Gives Rip. The business of the grovekeeper does not appear to run with increased smoothness with the lapse of years; for time in this, as in all other matters, tends to perfect conditions which were good and reasonable when established. In former days, when kid gloves were a luxury, and accordingly made principally in the best quality, it was the custom of the trade to guarantee that a grove would not rip in putting on. And they rarely did rip. So the buyer was gratified, while the vendor did not suffer. But this condition has been seriously affected by the growth of the trade and the multiplication of qualities; and it has been still more gravely affected by the gradual enlargement of the terms by the customer and the retailer. It is becoming rather too frequent a practice for the customer to bring back the gloves to the retailer after wearing them for some time, and appealing rather unfairly to the guarantee against ripping. The retailer may not have been in the material itself. The retailer finds it in the difficult to reason with a person whose custom he may be reluctant to jeopardize, when he is likely enough to do if his decision should carry with it the necessary implication that she has been "trying on" the gloves. It is a virtue or a vice, or necessity, and trusts to the same motive influencing the importer. In schoolboy phrase, he passes it on. Now the question is whether this is a sound and proper course. Loss must ensue, not to speak of loss of temper, whenever one is to pay for it in the long run. If the mischief be tracked to its source it will generally be found to arise from the purchase of too small a size for the wearer—perhaps through vanity, perhaps through thoughtlessness. The only way to obviate the consequent difficulty is for the retailer to notice that the gloves will not be changed on the score of their ripping if they are taken away before being fitted on. If tried in the shop the salesman must be very incompetent if he allows the customer to attempt to force on an unsuitable size, and especially in a close substance that cannot reasonably be expected to bear much strain.—Drapers' Record.
