secretary and has been with him for nearly a third of a century. She is sixty-four years old, while her husband is four years her senior. Harris has had an eventful career. He has been attacked and defended by persons of eminence, but his community seems to get along flourishingly in spite of everything. Harris says he has been rejuvenated by means of what he calls the "Divine Respiration," and will consequently never die. In this going Ponce de Leon's "Fountain of Perpetual Youth" one better Harris is left following out his general plan, which seems to be that originality pays. Persons who have been members of Harris' community have accused him of all sorts of immoral practices, and it is believed that his marriage was entered into directly with a view to supplying the tongue of scandal.

THE CRISIS IN GREECE.

Something about the Monarch Whose Act Has Precipitated It.

King George of Greece, the affable, "democratic" monarch, about whose popularity with his people so much has been written, has by his dismissal of the Deljanis ministry brought about a condition of affairs which borders closely on revolution. King George's career is a very romantic one, and the events leading up to the present trouble form a most remarkable combination of circumstances.

The king is the son of the king of Denmark, and is consequently the brother-in-law of the czar of Russia, whose autocratic methods of government he has inherited. He is the father of the young Prince George, who is now being brought up in the life of the court, and the latter was attacked by a Japanese policeman, won his

All sorts of soaps sell it, especially druggists; all sorts of people are using it.

UNCLESAM'S NEW GUN

LIEUTENANT CLOTH WRITES OF THE MEN WHO ARE BUILDING IT.

It is known as the Brown Segmental Wire Cannon, and Has Recently Been a Test Successfully—Careers of the Inventor and Constructor.

The recent successful test of the powder chamber of the new 5-inch Brown segmental wire gun, which is now being constructed at Birdsboro, Pa., for the United States government, under the supervision of First Lieutenant G. N. Whistler, Fifth United States artillery, has created quite a sensation among experts. It is therefore only natural that Americans should feel interested in two of their own kin who are likely to revolutionize the art of gunnaming all over the world.

John Hamilton Brown, the inventor of the Brown segmental wire gun, has had an eventful career, but in a large sense a fitting preparation for what he justly regards as the crowning work of his life. He comes from a distinguished ancestry, both of his parents being relatives of Commodore Perry, the hero of Lake Erie. His father was a clergyman and possessed of remarkable inventive talent. The son was born at Liberty, Waldo county, Me., on Jan. 28, 1837.

When a mere boy his rifle seemed to be his dearest friend. From his earliest childhood young Brown showed a strong taste for mechanics, and it is well worth mentioning that at the age of twelve years, when out hunting with one of his comrades, the nipple of the latter's gun broke, and the boy naturally was in great distress. John had no tools except an old file and a shoemaker's awl, but he shaped a new nipple and put it in its place. Thirty-five years later he saw the same gun still in good condition. At the age of eighteen he was apprenticed to a gunsmith, and made target rifles by hand, some of which sold as high as a hundred dollars apiece. In 1857 Mr. Brown went to Haverhill, Mass., and engaged in business.

There and at Boston he brought out a number of inventions for use in the manufacture of shoes. At the outbreak of the war he joined a company of sharpshooters, and made a record as the best shot among them. A few years later his inventive genius turned on labor saving machines. He at once set to work to increase the safety, range accuracy and rapidity of firing of the military rifle, and succeeded in producing an arm which was preferred by the rank and file, sharpshooters and cavalry. His latest invention is, as stated before, the Brown segmental wire gun, but for the development of this system of gun construction he is greatly indebted to First Lieutenant G. N. Whistler, Fifth United States artillery. The lieutenant's thorough knowledge of ordnance engineering has been of immense value to the inventor.

Whistler comes from a family of eminent engineers. One of the Whistlers was the originator of the American system of railways and locomotive, the elevation of the city is expressed for the personal safety and even the life of General Barrios, for Barrios is regarded by his opponents as a man who will stop at nothing to attain his object, and that object at present seems to be to emulate the example of Balmaceda, De Fonseca and other South American dictators. Whether his end will be as ignominious as De Fonseca's or as pathetic as Balmaceda's of course remains to be seen.

General Reina Barrios is a nephew of the famous ex-President of Guatemala, Guatemala, whose life was lost in battle and whose immensely wealthy widow is about to marry the Marquis De Roda in New York. When Reina Barrios first met the woman who is now his wife she could not speak a word of Spanish nor be a word of English. But the language of Capt. is universal, and in this case at least the course of true love did run smooth. Mrs. Barrios is a striking blond, and a woman of advanced ideas, who believes that the passions for revolution racked Guatemala is a universal education. She says that if her husband is ever elected president of Guatemala she will make use of the opportunities afforded by her high position to inaugurate measures for the amelioration of the condition of the masses of the people. She says that her adopted country only needs the infusion of American ideas to make it one of the most desirable places of residence in the world. General and Mrs. Barrios lived for some time in San Francisco, and always attracted a great deal of attention by their distinguished appearance whenever they drove in the park.

Rapid Literary Work. Mr. Rob. F. Walsh, the Irish author, has issued a Farnell memorial volume of some 800 pages, containing not only a detailed biography of Charles Stewart Parnell and another of Daniel O'Connell, but an immense fund of valuable information on Irish affairs. The author must have had unusual general knowledge of his country and countrymen, for the entire work was written in three months. It contains portraits and sketches of every Irishman and woman of note in this century, and is indeed a fitting memorial of the great advocate of Ireland.

HE SAVED FIVE LIVES.

The Reason Why a Daring Fireman Got a Gold Medal.

At the burning of the Hotel Royal recently in New York city, Sergeant John R. Vaughan, of Fire Patrol No. 3, saved five lives. For this he has received the Underwriters' medal, and the honor is well deserved by Samuel P. Biagden, president of the board of five underwriters, contained the best short statement of the wonderful coolness and heroism displayed in these words:

A fearful and an awful scene was presented at the burning of the Hotel Royal in the early hours of that beautiful Sabbath day. At a window in one of the upper stories was gathered a group with anxious faces—a father, mother and child—waiting, perhaps, to die together. At the next window, in an adjoining building, stood a sergeant of our patrol. The distance was too great to reach. Without hesitation he threw himself down, resting one arm upon the sill and catching his leg around a telephone wire, fortunately connected nearby. With his other arm, one by one he conveyed this group of four over his prostrate body, as a bridge, to the window of safety. His work was not yet done.

Ascending to the roof, he discovered a man standing upon the sill of a window in another portion of the house, doubting whether to meet them by jumping or to wait for them to be rescued by the fire. Shouting to him to wait and he would save him, he rushed to the street and, calling upon his comrades to follow, ascended to the roof of another adjoining building. Hastily throwing off his coat, his companions holding him by the legs, he threw himself head downward over the cornice and, with their assistance, raised this man over 200 pounds in weight to the roof. The rescue was completed. These lives were saved and we are gathered here today to honor a man who has done so much for his fellow-men.

The medal is of pure gold and handsomely engraved, containing a brief statement of the facts. It is given only in cases where life is saved under circumstances of great danger and difficulty, and this is the sixth time it has been given in the twelve years since the system was instituted. The presentation ceremonies were held in the main room of the Mutual Life Insurance building in Nassau street. The persons whose lives Sergeant Vaughan saved were J. W. Gibson, C. W. Kline, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Phelps and their little son.

HIS EIGHTEENTH CAMPAIGN.

About to Be Begun by Congressman Holman, of Indiana.

William Steele Holman, of Indiana, is about to begin his eighteenth campaign for Congress. He has been elected to the Thirty-sixth Congress in the ensuing thirty-four years he has been defeated but three times—in 1864, 1876 and 1878. This extraordinary success is due primarily, of course, to his talents and integrity, but very largely to his family history and the strong instinct of local pride among his constituents.

The family has been prominent for three generations. Jesse Lynch Holman, an eminent jurist, was born in Danville, Ky., in 1784, and his father, a prominent pioneer, was killed by the Indians while defending a blockhouse. The son wrote and published a novel entitled "Errors of Education" when but twenty-one years old and while studying law in the office of Henry Clay. In 1838 he removed to Indiana, where he became judge and member of the legislature, serving as supreme judge of the state for fourteen years. He was also United States district judge, and in addition labored as a Baptist preacher and was prominent in founding Baptist institutions of learning.

His son, the present congressman, was born in Dearborn county, Ind., Sept. 6, 1822, and after serving as judge, prosecuting attorney, member of the legislature and of the constitutional convention of 1850, entered Congress in 1859, and with the exceptions above noted has served continuously ever since. Of the thirty-three years since he entered that body he has served twenty-seven, has another year certain and the usual chances of an Indiana election in a presidential year.

THE WHITECHAPEL CLUB.

The Whitechapel club is a Chicago institution whose gruesome name is but a faint indication of the gruesome adornments of its rooms. Skulls and murderers' weapons, skeletons and ghastly reminders of terrible tragedies adorn the walls, yet among these surroundings some of the jolliest men in Chicago are to be seen, and there many eminent statesmen and jurists have been entertained.

The club recently marched in procession soon after midnight to its new rooms at 173 Calhoun place. Before starting the members sang a farewell to the old hall, and in memory of the stories told there the refrain ran thus:

In the days of old Bismarck, Are you not? They told the same thing. They told the same thing. In the days of old Bismarck, Theorists had no pains. Are you not? Are you not? In the new quarters the third room has a black wainscoting, red walls and a red ceiling along which black ropes are stretched, to which are attached many ghastly relics. There is a border of skulls around the walls, and the cranium of a murderer hangs from the chandelier, and seems to be glaring horribly at the jokes.

At one table sits a company of skeletons, each with a pipe in his mouth and a mug in his bony fingers. A collection of anarchist relics forms a sort of panel, and among the adornments are the towel which wrapped the corpse of Dr. O'Brien and a bloody shirt taken from the body of an Indian killed at Wounded Knee.

One room is shingled inside in the style of an old colonial building, and the whole place is finished in a barbarous combination of feudal and praiseworthy decorations. The walls are papered with the paper mache sheets from the stereotyping departments of American newspapers, many of them handsomely gilded, and when the place is lighted up at night the effect is well, very startling. But there is lots of fun there, and the invited guest is considered lucky.

Appropriate. "If I were you," the schoolboy said, "I'd go and I'd a sailor be." "You are so fond of sailing?" "I'm not."
