A MUSICAL BEAR.

The Novel Experience of a California Girl.

Her Piano Playing Attracts the Attention of Brains, and He Falls in Love with the young lady and the instrument.

Mary Carter was practicing her music and was all alone in the house. But for some reason she was always alone when she did so. As soon as she struck the first note of her exercises everybody went outdoors and staid there regardless of the style with which she went over the scales. Mary, according to the Elmira (N. Y.) Telegram, was a San Francisco girl who had gone to spend the summer with her sister, who married a rancher that lived away up in the mountains near the headwaters of American river. Her brother-in-law, Mr. Matthews, was well-to-do and fixed the little house to which he took his bride in fine style. Things were so elegant it was hard to imagine that the place was nearly fifty miles from civilization. When he was buying furniture he was persuaded to take a splendid grand piano, which in due time arrived at the ranch, and it was on this that Mary was practicing. She did not like the idea of being alone at first, but as she found it impossible to persuade her sister to stay with her she had to make the best of a bad job. She went over the scales carefully every few minutes, taking a look out into the garden to see that her relatives did not get too far away. After finishing one piece she rested a moment, thinking of what she would play next. Suddenly she heard a shuffling sound, and, turning around, she saw a large, brown bear standing in the doorway leading to the back part of the house. She was paralyzed with fear and could neither move from her chair nor scream.

She saw the bear come nearer, and she trembled like a leaf. Oh, how she wished she could faint. But she was a strong girl and couldn't, and the bear kept coming closer, and soon had his paws around her. She gave herself up for lost as she felt the grip, which she knew was deadly, tighten around her and the warm breath of the creature on her face. Looking through the window she could see the relative lounging around peacefully in the shade of the pines and tried to call them out, but her tongue would not move and she closed her eyes, expecting to open them in that happy land of which she had been taught from childhood. But what was this? The bear was not hurting her. He held her gently but firmly in his paws, and was actually licking her face, like a pet dog. She opened her eyes, and the world was the same as usual. She could not tell whether she was frightened or not, but somehow she did not try to scream. She just kept quiet, hoping the meddling world would happen to end the agony, but that did not understand. The bear did not hold her more than a second, although it seemed ages to the girl. He did not want to hold her, for he threw her on the floor. She was still frightened and expected the bear to jump on her and devour her at his leisure. But instead he turned around, commenced to claw the piano and was evidently delighted with his performance. For he kept time with his feet and looked around approvingly. The people outside the house did not pay any attention to it, as they afterwards said it was not unusual. Mary has never forgotten them for this. The bear began to play furiously, and Mary, seeing a way to escape, took advantage of it and ran away screaming from the room. Her relations at first refused to believe her story, but hearing the clatter ran to the window and looked in. Brains was still at it, and by this time had become so enthused that he was performing a sort of can-can to his own accompaniment. He got up in the height of his glory and had fallen on his back, the bass keys were, and with these he was particularly delighted. The deep, continuous rumble seemed to afford him the greatest pleasure, and he would excrete a bar that sounded like the cadenza of "A Storm at Sea."

He howled and jumped and whined, and at last concluded his concert by getting on the piano on all fours and executing a jig. At this time Mr. Matthews thought he had better take a hand, and he ran into the room with the club that was his only weapon available. The bear did not seem surprised, but got out of the way, and had there been room would have left the house. He was struck several times with the ax, but did not show fight, and the man thought he must have found a tame bear, although he could not imagine where it came from. He then changed his tactics and tried to capture it, as it did not appear dangerous. He got hold of it and tried to tie it to the piano. But at this time the bear's wild nature showed itself, and it got ready to make an attack. Before the man could realize what was coming he heard a deep, angry growl, and the next moment was clutched angrily by the monster. The bear could have killed him but it did not want to. It just gave him a good squeeze and threw him violently against the wall. After looking at him a moment the bear went out the door and walked leisurely into the yard.

Mr. Matthews and Mary rushed in and soon had Mr. Matthews back to consciousness. He got up and looked out of the window and saw the bear walking quietly over the hill in the direction of the mountain.

Twice Elected by One Vote. Only one man was ever twice elected governor of an American state by a single vote, and he was Marcus Morton. The Boston Herald recalls the fact that he was not only elected by the people in 1839 by one vote, as is generally remembered, but that he was also elected by the legislature in 1843 by a single vote. He was a candidate twelve years in succession before his first election. After that election, in 1840, he ran again, and was swamped by John Davis, who rode into office on the crest of the William Henry Harrison wave. In that year the whigs awoke the echoes with a campaign song which ran this way, to the tune of "Yankee Doodle":

Judge Morton took no governor—
I'll tell you how 'twas done, sir;
They gave him all the spurious votes
And squandered him in by one.

"Is your son doing well in business?" "Yes, indeed. He changes his position every week, because he says he knows all about it, and wants to learn a new branch."—R. K. & Co's Monthly.

In Paint

White Lead is best; properly applied it will not scale, chip, crack, or rub off; it firmly adheres to the wood and forms a permanent base for repainting. Paints which peel or scale have to be removed by scraping or burning before satisfactory repainting can be done. When buying it is important to obtain the cheapest.

Strictly Pure White Lead

properly made. Time has proven that white lead made by the "Old Dutch" process of slow corrosion possesses qualities that cannot be obtained by any other method of manufacture. This process consumes four to six months time, and produces the brands that have given White Lead its character as the standard paint.

"Southern" "Collier" "Red Seal" are standard brands of strictly pure lead made by the "Old Dutch" process. You get the best in buying them. You can produce any desired color by tinting these brands of white lead with National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors.

PAINTING MEAT.

Parisian Restaurant Keepers Have It Reduced to a Fine Point. "Did you ever eat painted meat?" asked a Parisian the other day, of a St. Louis Globe-Democrat man. "Yes, there is such a thing. Your American cooks are artists in their line, but do not know all the tricks of the trade. The idea is not a very old one, but all the most important restaurants in Paris now employ an artist, whose sole occupation is to paint beefsteak, chops and joints. A 'meat artist' just now is an important individual in the culinary department. Let me explain it to you.

"There was a party of diners at one of the big cafes, and they insisted upon having a leg of mutton roasted on a spit. The caterer already had a fresh leg of mutton roasted in the pan. This he wanted to dispose of, and called on his meat artist to make it look as though it were roasted on a spit. First the chef instructed it with a spit, which he immediately withdrew and then passed it to the painter, who added his own particular brush and its own peculiar name. Beside these lay a number of other brushes of various sizes, shapes, kinds and degrees of stiffness. The 'artist' studied the leg of mutton for a minute, much as one would study a landscape he was about to copy. Then passing his hand across his brow to aid his thinking, probably, he thrust his brush into a bowl of paint called rissolo and painted over the deep brown parts of the mutton that had just come from the oven. The next thing he did was to take a cloth and sprinkle over the mutton a powder of carbonized meat. This is calculated to make the morsel crackle under the teeth, and lends a crisp, brittle surface to the flesh. Then he applied a mixture called natural blood. With this he imitated the prickles from which the juice was supposed to have escaped in abundance. Then the leg was passed to the scullion, who poured a few spoonfuls of consommé in the dish and added a little beet juice. Then, taking a small syringe, he pierced three holes in the meat. Next he variegated the whole with a quantity of boiling grease. With these finishing touches M. Garcon placed it before the diners, and with a flourish announced that it had come 'just from the spit.' The guests ate it with a relish, and do not know the difference yet. Oh, it is perfectly harmless, but you never know what you eat, you know."

A Room for Brunettes. The brunette type is becoming more numerous in England and on the continent generally. Mr. Gladstone, who observes most things, said some years ago that light haired people were far less numerous than in his youth. This statement was borne out by the results of the statistical inquiry undertaken by Dr. Beddoe, who examined 720 women and found that 399 were brunettes and 327 blondes. Carrying this inquiry a step further, Dr. Beddoe learned that 72.3 per cent. of the brunettes had husbands, while only 65 per cent. of the blondes were married. From this it appears that in England a brunette has ten chances of being wedded to the nine chances of the blonde; and Dr. Beddoe went on to argue that the English are becoming darker because the men persist in selecting the dark-haired women as wives." The same thing is happening in Germany, in France, in Switzerland and elsewhere on the continent.

A Kansas Man's Experience. Mr. Albert Fawcett, of Arkansas City, Kan., wishes to give our readers a true idea of his experience with colds. He says "I contracted a cold early last spring that settled on my lungs, and had hardly recovered from it when I caught another that hung on all summer and left me with a hacking cough which I thought I never would get rid of. I had used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy some fourteen years ago with much success, and concluded to try it again. When I had got through with one bottle my cough had left me, and I have not suffered with a cough or cold since. I have recommended it to others, and all speak well of it. Fifty cent bottles for sale by Hettinger Bros. and Van Werden's Pharmacy, 228 North Main.

OUR BOSS HAS GONE EAST.

Everything in the house is for sale, and if you want a piano or organ, we boys will sure sell it if we don't make a dollar.

To cash customers this week we will give the biggest bargains you ever heard of.

Now if you don't think we will sell goods when Mr. Shaw is away, you bring your money and we will show you. We will do anything, nearly, to do a big business in his absence.

Shaw's Orchestra will play at the store on Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday afternoons of this week, and we want everybody to come; come and hear the music.

We have a large lot of very fine Guitars which are usually sold for $20; our window has in it a lot of them at $7.50 each; they are elegant goods.

The prices that are marked in large figures on the goods in our window will prove to you that we are after trade.

Our Bicycle and Sewing Machine men have "caught on" to the idea of doing business in quantity while the boss is gone.

Pianos, Organs, Bicycles, Sewing Machines, Guitars, Banjos, Band Instruments, Violins, Music Boxes, Sheet Music, Music Books and plenty of men to sell them.

If you intend to buy within the next year do it now, for you can save money.
