prose and childlike ailment, and beautiful Edith nearly broke her heart in dried agony.

Paul was more easily consoled. He wrote a requiem upon the baby's death, which greatly increased his fame.

At length, one day as Paul sat in his study surrounded by musical instruments and musical books of reference, with the manuscript of his precious cantata, now within a few lines of completion, beside him, his wife tapped at the door.

Paul did not want to be bothered by anybody at that moment. He had just finished a most admirable air, in which the feelings of a mother over a lost baby were suggested, with marvelous delicacy and truth.

She had a charming slender figure and a charming rose and cream complexion, and while secretly loving law

He was very kind and gentle in his manner. But ever and anon, whilst speaking to her, his eyes went back to his manuscript upon the table, and at sight of this Edith's long pen-up resentment and jealousy broke out.

"You think of nothing in the world but your work," she sobbed. "What do such men as you want with wife or child? Just a housekeeper to see that your meals are cooked and your clothes mended, and that you are not troubled in any way. Love and affection are nothing to you, less than nothing!"

He gazed at her with a gentle, wondering resignation, which irritated her still more. The very next day she would leave him, so she said, in order to travel about and try to forget her loneliness and grief.

He took the next train to London in order to do this, but only arrived at the Bayswater home to find that Miss Brandon had left for Italy.

Tired, dispirited, and annoyed at having wasted a day away from his beloved "score," Paul journeyed home, arriving at the station nearest to his cottage at eight o'clock in the evening.

A short cut through the woods would bring him to his own door in twenty minutes, and as he strode over the first fallen leaves of September, with his hands clasped behind him and his head full of unfinished melodies, he noticed a curious red, flickering light in the sky ahead of him, through the interlaced branches of the elms and chestnuts.

Too soon he was to know the cause of this. Sounds of hurrying feet, of shouts and cries, mingled with the crackle of burning wood and the fall of masonry, apprised him of the scene of riot and ruin awaiting him, where, a few hours ago, his peaceful, rose-bowered home had stood.

A lady, accidentally overturned by a careless servant, had been the cause of the fire. The local fire brigade had arrived too late, and the cottage was enveloped in a cloud of smoke, through which jets of flame shot up into the quiet evening air.

"My wife Edith!" Paul cried, in frenzied anxiety, as the meaning of the scene burst upon him.

His housekeeper, Martha, wringing her hands, cried out to him that Mrs. Vaughan had been standing where he now was, sound and unharmed, only a few short minutes before; but that as though suddenly remembering something, she had dashed forward, before her intention could be divined, and had disappeared within the burning house.

Count Up the number of times you have to rub a garment to get it clean, multiply it by the number of garments washed in a year.

Then you can see just how many back-breaking rubs Pearlina will save you, annually. You don't do the washing yourself? That doesn't make any difference. You need Pearlina just the same.
