PLATFORM.

The Republican party of Sedgwick county respectfully and briefly states its convictions upon the questions of public interest.

It has full confidence in the integrity, statesmanship and high purposes of WILLIAM MCKINLEY, president of the United States. It is our belief that his administration has added to the renown and stability of Republican institutions and forms of government at home and abroad; that its influence marks the beginning of a new era in which humanity has been advanced to a higher plane, at home and in the nations of the world; that his administration has restored national prosperity, and we agree with the words of the great Democratic New York World, "it is a good time in a good country" that it has placed the country where of right it properly belongs—the leader among the powers of the world.

That the administration of the affairs of this state, now in the hands of the Republican party, with a citizen of our own county, the Hon. W. E. Stanley, as chief executive, is capable, clean, deserving of, and does, receive our most cordial endorsement.

With intense satisfaction we commend the glorious record made by our army and navy and the unexampled gallantry of General Funston and our Kansas volunteers in the Philippine campaign.

It is our deliberate conviction that when on that May morning a year ago Dewey sailed into Manila bay and won the greatest naval victory of modern times, the American flag was, in accordance with the laws of every civilized nation, and in accordance with the express desire, as it is written in the march of human events, of an overruling Providence, rightly placed upon the Philippine Islands. That this right has been recognized by every civilized power, ratified by the senate of this country by solemn treaty with the power recognized by the world as the nation owning the Philippines. That our right to be there and oppose armed insurrection is no longer a party question; to uphold the government so long as armed forces are opposing it in its efforts to establish a stable government there, is loyalty; to oppose it is disloyalty. We condemn and denounce the unpatriotic and un-American actions of all who are giving encouragement to the Filipinos in their resistance to the American flag. Never yet has the old flag retreated before any armed foe, and wherever raised there it must stay.

The aggregation in this county known as the Fusion party is neither moved by, nor in possession of, a conviction or moral principle. It has abandoned every issue which brought it into life save the greed for office, and it now seeks by having its platform of treason adopted by the people of this county to bring the fair name and fame of Sedgwick county into disrepute and to disgrace the name of the gallant soldier which it bears.

We are opposed to aggregated capital, whether organized in the form of trusts, corporations or otherwise for the purpose of controlling the industrial affairs of the people, and we demand of our party in this state and in the nation such legislation which will at all times be for the best interests of all the people. That it is our conviction that every great question in which the people of this country have been interested has been in the past and will be in the future, settled in the interest of the people, by that genius of justice and right which prevails in and which brought the Republican party into existence; that it has the ability and integrity to properly settle and adjust the relations of capital and labor in the interest of the people.

HIS LONG LOST CHILD

Architect McKim, One of New York's Rich Men, Finds

DEPENDENT ON CHARITY

He Devotes Himself to Making Her Life Happy.

New York, Oct. 24.—The Journal says: A romance has been revealed in the life of Mr. Charles F. McKim, the famous New York architect.

It has raised the curiosity of fashionable society to the highest pitch. Mr. McKim was long known to be a man devoted to his club, but not fond of general society or the feminine element thereof.

Lately he has been observed in constant attendance upon a very handsome young woman. He has gone driving with her and taken her to the theaters, and appears anxious that she should be thoroughly amused.

The surprising fact now leaks out that this young woman is no other than his own daughter.

Those who had known Mr. McKim for ten years or more in New York never dreamed that he had a daughter. They knew that he had been married; that his wife had died, and that she had left no children. How, then, could he have a daughter? Herein lies the romance and the mystery.

The story began years ago, when Mr. McKim was a young man in Boston, without fame or position in the world. His acquaintance in New York do not remember that period, although it is familiar to certain circles in Boston. To day he is the head of one of the most successful firms of architects in New York. He is a man of wealth and public importance, and might figure in the world of fashion if he did not prefer the atmosphere of certain favorite clubs.

But neither success nor clubs have hardened his heart, for now he is devoting the time that was lately given to the Players' Club, to the care of a daughter from whom he had been involuntarily separated for twenty years. The fact that she is to some extent an invalid adds interest to the case.

Mr. McKim graduated from Harvard in 1847, and studied architecture for three years in Paris. When he returned to Boston he fell in love with a fair young daughter of the Puritan aristocracy. She was Miss Sarah Bigelow, a member of the ancient Massachusetts family of that name. She is a relative of Albert S. Bigelow, "the Copper King," whose son, Horatio, recently selected a bride from the ranks of Jordan, Marsh & Co.

Miss Bigelow and Mr. McKim were married in 1855. The bride was extremely young, and the marriage might have been qualified as a hasty one. It took place in Boston, and afterwards the young couple went to live in New York, where Mr. McKim devoted himself to the architectural art with an intelligence and energy which resulted in his ultimate brilliant success.

In 1858 a girl baby was born to them. She was christened Sarah, a name which is historical in the Bigelow family. After this event, a gradual estrangement seems to have taken place between the rising architect and his young wife. It appears that there were attractions drawing both of them in opposite directions.

Mrs. McKim obtained a divorce in 1880. Her little daughter, then four years old, was entrusted to her care. Within a few years Mrs. McKim married again, this time to the Rev. John S. Day, a Unitarian minister. He had been a suitor of hers before her marriage, and returned to his old love as soon as she was freed by the law. He was a native of Boston, but had a church in Newport at the time of his marriage.

The name of McKim was evidently displeasing to Mrs. John S. Day, for she changed her little daughter's name from Sarah McKim to Margaret Day. The child was brought up with the idea that she was Mr. Day's daughter, and most of the neighbors shared this belief. Mr. Day was for some years at Newport and then moved to Hingham, Mass., where he was pastor of the Unitarian Society.

Mr. Day had an income which was barely sufficient for the necessities of life, and the little girl was somewhat of a burden to him, especially as she was rather delicate. Her maternal grandmother, old Madame Bigelow, as she was known, according to an old-fashioned New England locution, took an interest in her. Madame Bigelow is a social autocrat in Cambridge, as the honorary prefix given to her indicates. She sent her granddaughter to a boarding school, and then to Radcliffe College, the woman's attachment to Harvard.

There she developed a nervous disorder, which finally became so serious that she broke down altogether and had to leave college. She went for treatment to the Nervine Asylum at Jamaica Plain, Mass., where members of Boston's highest society go from time to time to recover from the excessive intellectual strain under which they live.

At this institution the young woman improved greatly, and was able to go home. She went again to live with her mother at Hingham. She was by no means a favorite with the Rev. Mr. Day, who was pious but practical. He considered her dull and lazy, and found that she was particularly averse to manual labor. It appears probable that these faults were due to ill health, as they often are in young people, rather than to stupidity or unwillfulness.

She went to be treated for nervous trouble again, although against the Rev. Mr. Day's wishes. This time she went to a private hospital in Boston, and kept by a woman who had been a friend of hers at the Nervine Asylum, and attended by Dr. Robert T. Edes, who had been chief physician at that institution. The 315 a week paid for her keep and treatment came from her grandmother, Madame Bigelow.

Here it is necessary to return to the career of Mr. McKim. After his divorce he progressed rapidly in his profession, in company with his partners, Stanford White and William R. Mead.

In 1868 he married Miss Appleton, of the very famous Boston family of that name. The Appletons were in the mercantile circle of fashion at the Hub, and may be said to belong to the Brahmin caste. A sister of the Miss Appleton who became Mrs. McKim, is Mrs. George Von L. Meyer, who occupies in Boston a position similar to that of Mrs. Ogden Mills in New York.

Mrs. McKim brought her husband a large fortune and this, added to the income he was making in his profession, made him a rich man. About a year after her marriage she died, leaving Mr. McKim a widow for the second time. He was greatly broken by this event and his heart had little inclination for general society.

He is a member of the University, Century, Metropolitan, Equinet, Players', St. Andrew's Golf and other clubs. He has a handsome house at No. 9 East Thirty-fifth street. It contains many valuable pictures and some fine furniture, but unfortunately it was quite gloomy, as a place lacking the touch of a woman's hand is supposed to be. The only servant he kept was one old woman. The only visitor he entertained was Mr. Samuel Arver, the well-known art commissioner. Thus he learned the whereabouts of his daughter by his own wife, which had been concealed from him. It changed the whole conduct of his life. He was pained to learn that his daughter was but ill supplied with clothes and money, and that but for the kindness of her old grand-mother, she would have been practically destitute. He immediately sent a maid and a special nurse to the Jamaica Plain woman companion. From a nerve-wrecked and unhappy girl she is being transformed into a belle of New York society. Mr. McKim himself appears to rejoice in his new-found paternal duties. He used to wear a very severe and almost solemn expression. Now he is more elastic and his step is more elastic. He looks ten years less than his age, which is fifty-two.

Mr. McKim is one of the American commissioners to the Paris Exposition, and he will take his daughter there next week unless a revolution should be raging at the time.

It will be interesting to recall the chief events in Mr. McKim's career which have not already been noted. His full name is Charles Fulton McKim. He is the son of a well-known reformer and abolitionist of the war time, and was born in 1847. After graduating from Harvard Scientific School in 1867, he spent three years in architectural studies at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris. After returning he formed a partnership in New York with William R. Mead and Stanford White.

Their success has been largely due to the skill and taste with which they have copied the best examples of architecture of the classical, mediæval and renaissance periods.

Their buildings are scattered all over the city. Madison Square Garden, which is copied from the Girardin at Seville, and the Boston Public Library, which is Florentine. The Tiffany house is Renaissance, and very pleasing in its effect, while the Villard house, behind St. Patrick's Cathedral, is sixteenth century Italian, and is probably the most beautiful dwelling in the city.

Mr. McKim recently presented Macmillan's brilliant work "Bacchante" to the Boston Public Library. It is rejected by the library on the score of propriety, much to Mr. McKim's annoyance.

All New York society is familiar with the interiors as well as the exteriors of the splendid palaces which Mr. McKim has built for them, and that will perhaps lend additional interest to this romance of his life.

TEST OF THE MARCONI SYSTEM

Will be Made by the Navy Department Tomorrow.

New York, Oct. 24.—The navy department is to give Marconi's wireless telegraphy a practical test on Thursday. The cruiser New York and the battleship Massachusetts, now lying in the North river, are being equipped for the experiments by Signer Marconi. The experiments will be made at sea. Signer Marconi will send messages from the New York and he will have assistants on the Massachusetts as well as at the Highlands and Sandy Hook. One feature of the test will be the filing of the log wires of the "wireless" while the messages are being sent, to determine the influence of the system during an engagement.

Admiral Paraguard, commander of the North Atlantic squadron, will personally watch the tests, and upon the success of the experiments will depend the adoption of the system by the United States navy.
