MADE A GREAT HIT
Helen Grantly Scores Another Triumph in Wichita.
IS A WONDERFULL ACTRESS
"Her Lord and Master" Catches Wichita People.

Miss Helen Grantly scored an even greater success last night at the Crawford Theatre in "Her Lord and Master" than in her first appearance here as Catherine in "The Taming of the Shrew." Last winter she appeared before a Wichita audience for the first time and scored an instantaneous hit with them. To her success here was due the large crowd that greeted her on this her second appearance. To this large and fashionable audience she amply verified her claim as one of America's greatest emotional actresses. From the time she appeared on the scene in her hunting costume, radiant and lovely as a wild flower with the freshness of the morning dew and the glow of the sunshine in her face, until the curtain rang down on her complete transformation to the woman her husband wished to make her, she held the audience in a tense breathless spell with her marvelous acting. As the petted and spoiled child of the domestic circle in a smart white frock she was the incarnation of a sweet, lovable capricious maiden accustomed to have her way in everything, she won sympathy and admiration every time her large lustrous eyes were turned appealingly and as the perfectly proper young wife of the exacting English lord and his still more exacting mother, she was even more beautiful in her quaker-like attire and winsome as ever. In all she was perfectly natural. No stiffness, no suggestion of the theater, she was acting a part but so natural did she become and so much did she feel the character Indiana that the audience seemed to forget and imagine themselves a part of the play and the quarrel to be of as vital importance as the quarrel of their most intimate friends. It was not Helen Grantly who was doing the acting, but Indiana Stillwater, the little country girl, somewhat wild, transplanted from the green fields and broad practices of the great west to an aristocratic home in England trying to adapt herself to her new surroundings to please her husband and her mother. When one realized that all this was art, art which is seldom seen on the stage except in the largest eastern cities, that the dainty headstrong, yielding, defying and winning bundle of contradictions and variations was only simulation the pleasure was not lessened. "Her Lord and Master," the idyllic play by Martha Morton, in which Miss Grantly was seen in a pretty romance in which the author has clothed the lofty sentiment in fitting phrases. It has literary as well as dramatic excellence. It is wholesome and uplifting and plays upon the heartstrings like a noble poem.

Miss Grantly and her superb company presented the play in such a way as to bring out all its force and strength, as well as its beauty. It is the height of art to conceal art and this is what Miss Grantly does. That the company is in every way adequate to representation of this great drama was fully attested last night. No requirements were made by the play that were not more than met by the members of the cast.
The leading man, Lionel Adams, formerly with Julia Marlowe, is a polished actor, easy, natural, never excited even when his heart is stirred to the depths with conflicting emotions. The will power displayed and his sternness when he ordered the doors locked that kept his wife out of the house, when she had gone out against his express wishes, commanded the respect and admiration of the audience while it did not detract from the sympathy felt for the unconquered girl, and it is safe to say there was not a person in the house who did not sympathize with her in her trials. Anna Barclay, Indiana's grand-mother, was one of the most delightful characters on the stage. She is vivacious spirited, with that touch of independence found only in the true American. Her acting is refreshing and she carried the audience with her in her Americanisms sung at representatives of the short-lived British aristocracy.
Harriet Ross, as Indiana's mother, won applause by her impersonation of the character. Mr. H. T. Swayne as her father and William A. Shea, the brother, fit in admirably with the unfolding of the plot, and gained the plaudits of all by their work. Every one felt for Helen Masters, the rejected lover of Indiana, in his severe disappointment and rejected when the unfortunate maiden proved her individuality by going to the hotel to supper with him. They rejoiced when he had nerve and manhood enough about him to go to Indiana's husband and talk over unhappiness with him. There is not a bloom in "Her Lord and Master," and not a weak spot in the splendid cast. It simply delighted every one who saw it.

Suggestions What to Eat And How to Prepare Food.
These articles on the necessarily absorbing topic of food are carefully prepared and based on the principles of chemistry as applied to cooking and practical information derived from actual experience.

THE MANY CHEESE PREPARATIONS.
There are so many delicious ways of serving cheese, either in substantial dishes or in dainty little bits, such as entrees or savories, it is not possible for the ordinary cook book to give an exhaustive list of the many methods of preparing this valuable food product.
The diversity of cheese is an ever-varying and disputed question. But experience proves that to the average person certain kinds of cheese are as digestible as they are nutritious. When we consider the chemical composition of the best qualities of cheese we find it very rich, richer than any other known food, in nutritive elements; but it varies with the conditions of its manufacture. The skim milk forms are apt to be indigestible. The poorer the cheese the greater is the proportion of casein or the nitrogenous element, while the richer cheese contains a greater proportion of fat or butter. In either case, however, the proportion of nitrogenous matter in a given weight far exceeds that of meat.
When we question the value of cheese as an article of food we should consider that a large class of laboring men—the Scotch, the root of Scotch Whisky and many counties in inland where cheese is largely manufactured, and also the Swiss mountaineers—eat it as a substitute for meat. And these people experience no difficulty in digesting it as they eat it rationally and not as the American usually consumes it, as a savory, to be eaten at the end of a full dinner. This is almost sure to injure by placing an additional burden upon an already overtaxed digestion, as the system must discard as waste this additional nitrogenous matter which it has no use for.
Cheese of the skim milk variety requires a longer time for digestion than the richer cheese owing to the smaller amount of fat and larger amount of casein contained in the former. Among the best cheeses are the Cheddar, most famous of all English cheeses, with its nutty, delicious flavor. Cheeses similar to this English Cheddar are made in the United States and Canada. The Stilton is another choice English cheese. Its rich pale-colored substance is marked with greenish veins. This is never eaten until well cured. It is a dessert cheese which rivals the Roquefort and the Italian Gorgonzola. This latter cheese, though considered "salty" and "acidic," best pleases the true gourmet.
France produces forty varieties of cheese, the most famous among them being the Roquefort, Gorgonzola, Port du Saint, Eric, Camembert and Neufchatel. The Gorgonzola is a thick firm cheese much used in cooking. A variety of this cheese is made in Switzerland and is usually flavored with herbs.
Neufchatel cheese is familiar to most housekeepers. It is the rich creamy white cheese put up in tiny round tins, with its foil and in a very popular dessert cheese, favored by those whose taste does not relish the strong flavored varieties. The rare, ripe cheeses, beloved by the epicure, are their peculiar and individual flavors to the dampness, certain temperatures, and cultivation of certain peculiar species gives us.

WELSH CUSTARD.
Take one cup of dry ground coffee, four eggs, one cup of milk, one tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour mixed with milk, a bit of baking soda the size of a pea, half a teaspoonful of salt and a pinch of cayenne. Heat the milk, stirring in the soda, butter, salt, cayenne and the milked flour. Beat the eggs and pour the scalding hot mixture over them; add the coffee, beat up for a minute, then pour into buttered custard cups and bake in a brisk oven for about twenty minutes. They should puff up and be a dainty brown. Serve immediately or they will fall. Pass waters with them.

Good Little Cheese Cakes.
Mix two cups of soft butter, four ounces each of fresh butter and sugar, a small nutmeg grated, two stale, grated lady fingers. Stir into this mixture the white of one and the yolks of four eggs, an ounce of almond paste mixed with two teaspoonfuls of rose-water and the same of white wine. Then add six ounces of well washed and dried currants. Mix all well together and pour into patty pans lined with puff paste and bake in a moderate oven until paste is done—about half an hour.

Gherkin Buck.
Put half a pound of good American cheese in a saucepan; sprinkle with a little cayenne and wet with oil, allowing a cup of oil to a pound of cheese. Stir while adding the oil until the cheese is a soft creamy mass, then pour it over hot fried toast, place a thin, crisp slice of fried bacon on top of each and a gherkin shredded, on top of bacon and serve very hot.

Pulled Bread.
Break off the crumbs of fresh baked bread in irregular pieces and dry in a very slow oven until lightly browned and crisp; then store in tin in a dry place until needed and reheat before serving. A very light, rather coarse crumbed bread is the closest for this method of serving.

Brittle Molasses Candy.
A subscriber writes: "Will you please inform me how to make molasses candy so as to have it hard and brittle?"
Molasses Snaps.
Two cups of granulated sugar, half a cup of molasses, half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar and a level teaspoonful of butter. Cook all the ingredients except butter together until the mixture will crack when dropped in cold water. Do not be in a hurry to remove it from the fire, as it may be very hard. When almost done, drop in butter. Remove from the fire and drop from a spoon into a buttered plate or marble slab into small round cakes, or it may be poured out in a thin layer in a buttered tin and when cold broken into small pieces. If this is cooked long enough, it will not get sticky or soft if kept for a week or two.

FOOD TO USE
When Doctor is Not Convenient.
Many people dislike to call in a doctor until it is absolutely necessary; frequently a change of food will work wonders.
A young lady in Russellville, Ky., writes: "I was taken ill one week ago, and could not take solid food; was only allowed to eat soup and milk. I went to bed, but I got so weak and nervous that I could not sleep. Father wanted to call in a doctor, but I objected, as I did not feel I needed medicine as much as good food. The next day father had to go to town, and brought back a package of Grape-Nuts with him, and I commenced eating it twice a day in milk. I would get hungry for it from one time to the next. In a few nights I could sleep soundly all night, and in two weeks I was up and had actually gained flesh and was much as strong as before I got sick. I would not eat without Grape-Nuts now for anything, and my friends suggest them for my meals. I tell them I owe it to Grape-Nuts, and recommend it to all who complain with stomach trouble, which is the general complaint in this neighborhood." Name given by Patient Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Good Little Cheese Cakes.
Mix two cups of soft butter, four ounces each of fresh butter and sugar, a small nutmeg grated, two stale, grated lady fingers. Stir into this mixture the white of one and the yolks of four eggs, an ounce of almond paste mixed with two teaspoonfuls of rose-water and the same of white wine. Then add six ounces of well washed and dried currants. Mix all well together and pour into patty pans lined with puff paste and bake in a moderate oven until paste is done—about half an hour.

Gherkin Buck.
Put half a pound of good American cheese in a saucepan; sprinkle with a little cayenne and wet with oil, allowing a cup of oil to a pound of cheese. Stir while adding the oil until the cheese is a soft creamy mass, then pour it over hot fried toast, place a thin, crisp slice of fried bacon on top of each and a gherkin shredded, on top of bacon and serve very hot.

Pulled Bread.
Break off the crumbs of fresh baked bread in irregular pieces and dry in a very slow oven until lightly browned and crisp; then store in tin in a dry place until needed and reheat before serving. A very light, rather coarse crumbed bread is the closest for this method of serving.

Brittle Molasses Candy.
A subscriber writes: "Will you please inform me how to make molasses candy so as to have it hard and brittle?"
Molasses Snaps.
Two cups of granulated sugar, half a cup of molasses, half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar and a level teaspoonful of butter. Cook all the ingredients except butter together until the mixture will crack when dropped in cold water. Do not be in a hurry to remove it from the fire, as it may be very hard. When almost done, drop in butter. Remove from the fire and drop from a spoon into a buttered plate or marble slab into small round cakes, or it may be poured out in a thin layer in a buttered tin and when cold broken into small pieces. If this is cooked long enough, it will not get sticky or soft if kept for a week or two.

SHREDDED WHEAT BISCUIT
A wise old man told his sons that as long as they kept together like a bundle of fagots they could not be broken, although each one separately could not withstand much strain.

Chemistry shows that each property of the wheat has an exact counterpart in the body and that the wheat is, therefore, if not identical with, it is akin in making, while flour, which is the essential power.

SCHMIDT ON THE SPOT
Union Labor Mayor of San Francisco
Chicago, Nov. 17.—Joseph E. Schmidt, the Union Labor mayor of San Francisco, told the members of Chicago's trades unions tonight that they could place their own representatives in the city hall if they would forget all personal differences and work for the common cause.
Notwithstanding that all but one of the labor candidates on the Cook county ticket were defeated by the second election, Mr. Schmidt said he was sure the proposed labor ticket at the coming spring election could be made successful.
