skies, gentle zephyrs and a friendly, low-rolling surf mean anything to Hawaiian canoeists. It seemed that the personal deity which guided the great Kamehameha in all his pugnacious undertakings, assuring him safe journeys across long wastes of ocean waters in his frail crafts and made his landing against Oahu's hostile forces so successful more than a century ago, had come back to hover broodingly over the greatest celebration in honor of his memory. In short, "cutting out" the persiflage, the day was perfect. The crowd filled every available foot of seaside standing room from the long wooden pier extending out from the Moana Hotel, to the home of the Outrigger Club. If it is possible to pack men, women and children in that space to the number of 10,000, then that number was there. Great Masses of White. The predominant shade was white. Had King Kamehameha been confronted, at the time of his invasion, by a spectacle of that character it is odds that great warrior's presiding deity would have taken flight in confusion and that the old savage himself would have turned tail and fled out to sea as fast as his paddlers could wield their oars. The shimmer of white and the receptive attitude of the throng would have so astonished him that he undoubtedly would have concluded he'd invaded a new country. Whether he would have "taken a chance" is extremely doubtful. Kamehameha's modern "double," being a modern man, accustomed to the wiser rites of our so-called civilization, did not display the least confusion in fulfilling his part of the program. In the crowd of onlookers were hundreds of tourists. Rarely one of these was unarmed with a kodak. The others ran here and there, perched on all high points, rushed out dauntlessly into the water to meet the oncoming force of spear-armed natives and it is safe to say our modern hero was shot fully 1000 times. But as remarked before, he is a sturdy man, accustomed to this sort of indignity. Risks Much for a Picture. Kamehameha I. knew the danger of guns when in the hands of enemies. He knew the world moved, as well as some other days realize the fact. He was quick to pick up new methods of warfare and to fear novel methods until he understood them thoroughly. How he would have felt, had he seen that frail little white man wading out fearlessly into water to his neck, holding high above his head a little black, ominous-looking box, can be only conjectured. Thinking it another form of cannon and that the bearer intended harm, he probably would have had the intrepid bather speared or shot at once. But the man shot out Kamehameha with perfect safety. Immediately after the ceremony of landing most of the crowd returned to town, though a large number gathered on the beach around the army of natives and were awarded by witnessing the hula dance. Other sports had been planned, but the crush of people was so great, that the police facilities so inadequate, that these were declared off. The ceremony therefore ended at 11 o'clock. At Work in the Dark. It was long before sun-up that John Wise and his assistants reached the grounds of the Outrigger club and set to work putting the final touches to the pageant which they had been working upon for weeks. Then for the first time they realized the difficulty of their task. The men and boys who had promised to be there for the affair failed to show up, and Wise started his lieutenants out on a still hunt for others to take their places. The Hui Nalu jumped into the breach and filled seventeen canoes with stalwarts and the lads of the Outrigger club proved their willingness to aid, for with a coating of grease paint, a malo and a flashing paddle, they made the finest kind of Hawaiians so far as outward appearance went. The Outriggers sent twelve canoes to join the flotilla. Under the command of Kamehameha the Great, who in private life is Officer Palenapa, of the Honolulu police force, the canoes paddled forth into the very eye of the morning, back of gloomy old Diamond Head, to await for the signal to return in triumph. Hardly had the last of the canoes left the land when the ladies who were to play the part of wives and favorites of the King, arrived, headed by Mrs. Blaisdell, costumed to the full as an ancient Hawaiian princess. Forty in Flotilla. In all there were in the flotilla about forty canoes, big and little, and as they paddled away in the gloom of the early morning each canoe was loaded to the guns. Not a phase of the old conflict had been forgotten and as many of the features that made the flotilla of Kamehameha the Great unique had been placed aboard the canoes as could be got together in the short time allowed the managers of the pageant. There were the tabu sticks, carried by the Puloulo, or custodian of the sacred things, there were the feathered tufts or the kahilis, sign of royalty, there were the paus or bows, and the paus or arrows, the deadly little poisoned darts, the heads made of the split leg-bone of a chicken, and dipped in a brew made of a moss that grows on Maui and Hawaii and nowhere else in the islands; there were muskets that looked like they might have really made the landing with the great chief, and there was the fac simile of the cannon manned by Davis and Young, the white men accompanying Kamehameha, which drove the warriors of Kalamikupule, king of Oahu, back from the beach and afterward destroyed them on the heights of Nuuanu Fall. PUBLIC SCHOOLS FLOAT

"Education of the Heart, Head and Hand" will be the subject of an interesting float which is to be entered in the Foirat Parade to-morrow afternoon by the pupils of the public schools of Honolulu. The float, which will be one of the largest in the parade and which will be taken part in by twenty-eight pupils from the different schools, will depict the various forms of education which are carried on in the city. Education of the hand will be represented by pupils engaged in carpenter work, blacksmithing, sewing, cooking, working in the garden, etc. Education of the heart will be represented by pupils caring for children, pets, flowers and animals, and education of the head will be represented by pupils studying in open-air schoolroom under the direction of a teacher. School was called as usual this morning but many of the teachers took their classes out to Waikiki to witness the landing of Kamehameha the Great. Outside of those taking part in the float, the children of the public schools will not participate in the parade to-morrow. There will be several hundred pupils at Thomas Square tomorrow morning to give the flag salute as the military parades pass. CLERK MURPHY IS HOLDING HIS OWN. Augustus E. Murphy, clerk of the U. S. district court and exalted ruler of the local lodge of Elks, who was stricken with paralysis at his office yesterday afternoon, is still in a serious condition at his home, 1428 Victoria street. There was no marked change in his condition during the night. The stroke is reported to have affected the entire left side of his body. Murphy was to have officiated to-night as mayor of the Elk's big show at Roaring Camp. RACE MEET TODAY (Continued from Page 1) For Hawaiian-bred horses. F. Brughell's Major Collier, first, with Al-lone, owned by Angus McPhee, second. Henry Freitas' "Cane Tops" scratched. Time, 1:17. The sixth race ended the events of the morning, intermission being called at this time in order to give the spectators a chance to get their lunch. The second half of the program commenced shortly after 2 o'clock. One of the interesting events of the afternoon's races will be the gentlemen's riding race, post entries. It is believed that several officers of the Fourth Cavalry will enter this race. AUTO ENTRY LIST MAY GET LATE ADDITIONS. Safe for Woman's Use

Nothing is more annoying to a refined woman than offensive perspiration on her body odors. Those who have used Tyree's Antiseptic Powder know it to be the one remedy which never disappoints. For general uses—dependable in all cases—it should be in every household. Unequaled as a douche. Recommended by physicians everywhere, as it contains no poisons. One 25c box makes two gallons standard solution. All druggists or write for booklet and free sample. J. S. Tyree, Chemist, Washington, D. C. NO HOLIDAY AT POLICE BAR. Police Calif Monsarrat was on the job today, the carnival notwithstanding. Pedro de la Cruz stole something, for which he has to do the penance of loafing, the only constitutional penalty for such a short term, for ten days in the county jail. S. Uno carried more freight on the bar of his bike than ordinance No. 11 allows, and it came to $5 and costs, for which he has to do the penance $5 and costs. Harry Wilson would appear to be a man of violence, $35 and costs being the measure of the type of assault and battery of which he was found guilty. Kaipo must have been milder in his method of battering, for a case of the same kind against him was appraised at $10 without costs. James Todd mingled his vernacular toddy with profanity, and next time his unruly member is disposed to break loose the memory of $3 and costs may impel him to curb it. There was a polyglot assortment of eight drunks dealt with, one forfeiting ball and the rest being taxed the moderate rates in such cases made and provided. A good many cases went over, venue in none being changed to Roaring Camp court. ROARING CAMP OPEN TONIGHT. The gates of Roaring Camp will be thrown open at 7 o'clock this evening and hundreds, nay thousands, of people will flock to the township of Elks have erected on Bishop park for the purpose of boosting the carnival and reproducing something of the excitement of the days of 1849 in a western mining camp. Two entrances will admit the throngs, one on King street and the other on Hotel street. Admission is fifty cents for adults and twenty-five cents for children. There is a bank at either gateway, where for each American dollar paid in the visitor will receive one hundred dollars in Roaring Camp currency. All the big exhibits will be ready when the show opens. There will be the theatre, where the best available vaudeville talent will do stunts; there will be a general merchandise store, where almost anything may be purchased with "Roaring Camp" currency. There will be the Palace of Illusions, the Hot Cat Eating House, Red George's dancing hall. The Red Men, Hawaiian Tribe No. 1, will have their tepees and campfire and there will be real Indian dances. The automobile contest will create much excitement. Saloons, gambling halls, Chinese wash houses, fan tan, cowboys, rough riders, bad men and a hundred and one curious and entertaining stunts will contribute to the pleasure of the evening. The spectacle will be splendid. Thousands of electric lights will brighten the gay scene. Men and women will be in costume. Carnival will be rampant. I read it in the Star-Bulletin. It must be so.

Greene is a G. A. R. veteran with a distinguished record, having served throughout the civil war with the Rhode Island volunteers. He has been a familiar figure about the capitol since the overthrow in 1893, when he first entered upon his duties there. He was operated upon at the Queen's Hospital last Tuesday. Word was received at the police station this morning that a Japanese man had been killed in the railway yard at Waigahua. Communication was wanted with Deputy Sheriff Fernandez of Ewa, who had gone to town, so that he could look after the body and hold an inquest. Reports up to the time of going to press differ with regard to the fatality. One account is that the man was run over by a shunting engine while he was crossing a track. Another is that the man's body was found on the track, and that he had died while intoxicated. It is further said that he was a well dressed and appeared to have been bound for the railway station to take a train for Honolulu. AGED CARETAKER PAYS DEAR FOR FIDELITY. Hovering between life and death at the Queen's Hospital, R. J. Greene, aged civil war veteran and for over twenty years custodian of the capitol grounds, talks continually in his illness of his duties at the capitol and of the responsibilities he shouldered in order to have the building and grounds in shape for the opening of the legislature. Keeping him on his feet long after he should have been operated upon, it was Greene's fidelity to duty, declare the physicians at the Queen's Hospital, that is responsible for his serious condition. In spite of illness, Greene stuck to his post and refused to be operated upon until his plans for the reception of the legislators had been consummated.
