DETAILS WATER CONDITIONS OF THESE ISLANDS

The latest press bulletin of the U. S. Geological survey contains the first official publication of the water resources of Hawaii, as follows: Water for irrigation is the life blood of the Hawaiian Islands. During 1911 nearly 99 per cent of the exports of the islands to the United States, valued at more than $40,000,000, consisted of agricultural products, and of this amount 93 per cent had either been absolutely dependent on irrigation for its growth or had required the application of water at some period or other to give the largest and most profitable yield.

The late rains seemed to have little effect upon the four reservoirs in the Nuuanu valley, according to records kept at the water works office. Nuuanu reservoir No. 1, which has a total maximum capacity of 21,000,000 gallons, had but 13.6 feet of water yesterday, while No. 2, with a capacity of 7,000,000 gallons, had nine feet. Reservoir 3, with a capacity of 10,000,000 gallons, was full, and No. 4, the big Nuuanu dam, had only 21 feet of water. While there have been but slight showers in the city for the past three days, the valleys back of the city have experienced rather heavy precipitation.

The critical period is approaching in Hawaiian agriculture, and the point has been reached in the utilization of water at which it is necessary to have definite information regarding the available sources of water before further progress can be made. As the time of agricultural development in the islands is controlled principally by the possible water supply, it is necessary either to tap new and undeveloped sources or else to save losses in existing supplies and so increase their economic value. The work of the geological survey has already proved of the greatest importance, some of the largest irrigation ditches, for example, having been found to be delivering much less water than was supposed. The investigations of stream flow are, however, by no means complete nor do they include all the streams that might advantageously be studied. The work is still in progress and is being pushed as rapidly as the combined appropriations of the territory and the United States will permit.

The three principal crops of Hawaii are sugar, rice and taro. Sugar is by far the most important product, and large areas planted in cane depend entirely on irrigation. Some of the lands are naturally adapted to the growing of rice but require a certain quantity of water varying in amount with the stage of the crop. Taro is also an important crop, furnishing the staple food for a considerable part of the population; it requires a continual application of water during its growth. Taro is a large plant which yields a root tasting somewhat like an Irish potato. It is grown to a considerable extent in the United States as an ornamental plant and is popularly known as elephant's ear.

A contract entered into by a wealthy Chinese association with the Union Oil Company for large amounts of oil has just been made known; many of the details of the contract have not been given out. Tank steamers will be put in service by the Chinese association with a few months, it is said, carrying the oil from San Francisco to China. The contract is said to be for ten years.

CHINESE PURCHASE BIG SHIPMENT FROM UNION OIL COMPANY

During the eleven months of the last fiscal year there were 65,101,340 gallons of oil sent to China from the United States, valued at $4,533,227. Twenty-five per cent of this amount came from California.

EXPERT RISKS LIFE TO SAVE DROWNING DOG

[By Latest Mail] SAN FRANCISCO.—Phil Finnell, wireless operator on the liner Korea, which arrived yesterday from the Orient, risked his life in Hongkong harbor to save the life of a stray dog. Although it was midnight on moonless night, and in spite of the fact that the dog was in the clutches of a racing tide, he made the rescue and the dog, which was christened Bum, is now the Korea's mascot.

Finnell and some of the ship's freight-clerks were in their quarters for a midnight lunch when a Chinese sailor rushed in and announced that "a piece of dog" was overboard. They all went to the rail and saw, about 20 yards from the ship, what looked like a ball of fire. There were yelps coming from it, and as they watched they made out the dog's head, wreathed in a halo of phosphorescence.

In spite of the strong tide, which had carried the dog past the liner's gangway, Finnell dived overboard and 10 minutes later returned to the gangway with the dog. He was winded and the brute had barely a yelp left. Everybody but the dog thought Finnell had taken a foolish chance, but the dog thinks "Sparks" a bigger man than the skipper.
