WATSON AND WILDER SUGGESTED TO FILL VACANT JUDGESHIPS

Edward Minor Watson and Judge Arthur Ashford Wilder, who have been suggested by Governor Pinkham to succeed Associate Justices Antonio A. Perry and John T. De Bolt, of the territorial supreme court.

Governor Pinkham Makes Initial Recommendation For Positions And is Well Pleased With His Choice

Thompson, Wilder, Watson & Lymer.
Judge Arthur Ashford Wilder was born in Honolulu, November 3, 1873, the son of John K. Wilder. Receiving his early education at the Fort Street school and Punahou Preparatory school, he later went to Yale, graduating in 1897 with high honors, and returning to Honolulu was admitted to practice in the courts that same year. After practicing here a short time he returned to Yale, where he took a post-graduate course.
Shortly after he returned here he formed a partnership with Honorable bench both in years and in service, Judge Wilder, having served a previous term. Watson was born December 29, 1874.

Though long prominent in Democratic politics he has never been a seeker after public office. In fact, the only time he ran for office he did it unconsciously, if the term may be used. He was on his wedding trip when the Democrats of Honolulu decided to put him up for city and county attorney. That was in 1905.
When he returned from his wedding trip he found that he had been nominated and had made a good campaign but had been defeated.
Associate Justice Antonio A. Perry of the territorial supreme court was born at Honolulu, January 5, 1871. He first attended the public schools of the city, later continuing his studies at St. Alban's College and Oahu College, graduating from the latter in June, 1889. He continued as student there another year, taking post-graduate work.
He then went to the mainland intending to enter college but owing to ill health was unable to fulfill this ambition and returned to Honolulu, entering the law offices of Judge A. S.
Hartwell, where he studied until March 15, 1893, when he was admitted to the bar. He remained with Judge Hartwell another year, until he was appointed district magistrate, September 1, 1894. On January 11, two years later he received the appointment of second circuit judge and on November 1, 1897, was promoted to first circuit judge. He held this position until he was appointed first associate justice of the supreme court by President William McKinley, on June 6, 1900. After serving four years he retired to private law practice, but was reappointed to his present position as associate justice in 1905.

Hon. John T. De Bolt was born in Texas, December 19, 1857. His father was a native of Ohio who settled in the Lone Star state, continuing his occupation as farmer and school teacher. Just before the Civil War his father, in sympathy with the Union, removed to the North, settling at Leavenworth, Kansas, remaining there during the war. It was there Judge De Bolt received the earlier part of his education. In 1888 the family again moved, this time to Missouri. While there young De Bolt spent his time on the farm in summer and at the country schools in winter.

Going to California in 1879 he joined two companies in an overland journey by wagon through northern California and eastern Oregon, up to the present site of Spokane, Wash., which then was a village of 250 inhabitants.
He left Spokane in 1883 and the following year found him studying law in the office of ex-Chief Justice Orange Jacobs of Washington Territory, one of the ablest jurists of the Northwest.
In 1887 he was admitted to the bar, immediately beginning practice.

Judge De Bolt came to Honolulu June 7, 1894, at once opening an office here. In 1902 he was appointed first judge of the first circuit court, where he served eight years. He was appointed associate justice of the supreme court in January, 1910.

President to Nominate.
Governor Pinkham's recommendations will go to the department of justice and then be referred, in the expected order of events, to the president, who sends the nominations to the senate. The senate is expected to confirm the appointments without delay, as both men are veteran Democrats and there will be no protest on their selection.
